Who dares stand idle?

Thomas Tertius Noble: A Life in Church Music 1867-1953

Thomas Tertius Noble (1867-1953) was a British organist, who, after completing successful tenures at Ely Cathedral and York Minster, uprooted his life and immigrated to America to establish a choir school, in the English cathedral tradition, at New York's illustrious St Thomas's Church, Fifth Avenue. Noble's early training at the Royal College of Music, under Charles Stanford, Frederick Bridge and Walter Parratt, equipped him with extraordinary skills, which coupled with his charismatic persona, made him one of the finest musicians of his generation.

Noble's unique ability for forming lasting relationships and inspiring musicians of all levels and backgrounds, created the ideal situation for achieving the task he undertook during his thirty years in New York. With the support of the rector, the music committee and vestry of St Thomas's, he formed a choir school for the boy choristers, which served (and still serves) as the epitome of taste and musical quality within the tradition of Anglican choral music in the United States.

The convergence of primarily source material and personal accounts of Noble as a man and musician, have brought about a significant contribution to knowledge surrounding the life of this extraordinary individual. Through insight gained in his unpublished autobiographical Memoirs, personal and professional papers, vestry minutes, parish yearbooks and considerable archives of both the church and choir school, an understanding of Noble's successful career and his unfortunate departure from St Thomas's, has been brought to light for the first time.

The importance of St Thomas's Church in the international world of cathedral music is profound. Alongside Westminster Abbey, it possesses the only remaining choir school that exists for the sole purpose of training and educating the boy chorister. If not for the vision and expertise of Noble, this tradition in the new world would be merely a legend, rather than a thriving reality.

INTRODUCTION

The life and achievements of Thomas Tertius Noble occupy a unique place in the annals of Anglo-American church music of the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries owing to the seminal work he carried out at St Thomas Church, New York (STC) at the corner of 53rd Street and Fifth Avenue. Noble (TTN) was by no means the first British organist to migrate to the USA in order take up employment in the North American Episcopal Church. The earliest instance was Edward Enstone who was brought over by King's College, Boston to play in the British colonial period in 1714, well before American independence.[1] Yet TTN was certainly one of the most well-established and noted cathedral organists of his generation to seek employment outside the British Isles. His colleagues in the large Episcopal parishes of New York City were excellent musicians in their own right, but none had had Noble's training, experience or influence to cement their musical position, nor were they ultimately in a position to secure the future of the boys' choir tradition in America.

Church music in North America at the turn of the twentieth century was as rough and uncharted as the geography of the United States: expectations were not clearly defined and the centuries-old tradition of cathedral music in England was not mirrored or enjoyed in the USA. TTN was the descendant of an ancient lineage of cathedral musicians, where the English cathedral tradition ensured that there was a consistency of standards and training from generation to generation:

> It must be distinctly realized that although each county in England supposedly had its professional cathedral choir, there were never any such choirs brought over to this country [America]. Individual musicians migrated, but wherever choirs were established they began with untrained, amateur voices and proceeded to build their own tradition with no professional choirs to provide models for comparison.[2]

Boys' choirs in America have had a mixed history. By the advent of the Oxford Movement in the 1830s, they had become almost obsolete due to the rising popularity of the professional quartet.

> Work with boy choristers had entirely lapsed in New York…by the time William Augustus Muhlenberg started his boys' choir at the Flushing Institute on Long Island in 1828. Eight or nine years later, the Reverend Francis L. Hawkes introduced a vested choir into his school, St. Thomas' Hall, Flushing, Long Island…In 1844 two Episcopal parishes – the Church of the Advent, Boston, and the Church of the Holy Cross, Troy, New York – were established and endowed for the regular maintenance of the full offices of the Episcopal Church. They were pioneers of the Oxford Movement in this country [America]. In both churches there were choral services within a short time; in the latter, under John Ireland Tucker, unaccompanied plainsong was regularly used by a choir of boys and girls almost from the start…Grace Church, New York, had been slow to give up its quartet choir, but when a boy choir was finally established no halfway measures were used…Next in order was the choir school established at New York's Cathedral of St. John the Divine in 1901…The choir school of Washington Cathedral was established in 1909 as a day school…St. Thomas Church, New York, established its choir school in 1919.[3]

TTN, himself, was neither the product of a choir school nor of a boarding school environment. His story is unique insofar as he was a self-made man. Born into a poor family with no social standing, every achievement and accolade he received was due to hard work and a self-disciplined determination to succeed. He was trained at the Royal College of Music by three leading musicians of the period, Charles Villiers Stanford, Frederick Bridge and Walter Parratt, all three of whom were pillars of the Anglican musical establishment. Following his graduation from the RCM, he became Stanford's assistant at Trinity College Cambridge. Stanford had a profound influence on TTN's character and musicianship, solidifying his ability to succeed in the world of cathedral musicians. From this experience, he was positioned to take his first post of organist and master of the choristers at Ely Cathedral in 1892. While at Ely, TTN enjoyed a successful relationship with the choir and the Dean, Charles Stubbs. He also met and married his wife, Meriel Stubbs, daughter of the Dean. In 1898, at the age of thirty-one, the young TTN and his bride moved to York where he forged a prosperous fifteen-year relationship with the Minster and the city. Aside from his liturgical duties, he became well-known through his founding of the York Symphony Orchestra, where his reputation as an orchestral conductor was as widely respected as was his work in cathedral music. It was felt by many, including his teachers at the RCM, that TTN was positioned to ascend to a post at either Westminster Abbey or St Paul's Cathedral;[4] however, this was not to be. TTN, through an unlikely set of circumstances, was sought-out by STC in late 1912 to move to America and fill the post of organist and choirmaster of their grand new edifice on Fifth Avenue, one of the most wealthy and fashionable neighbourhoods in America. TTN, his wife Meriel and their son, Philip arrived in New York City (NYC) in April of 1913. Over the next thirty years, TTN formed a choir school and trained the choir of men and boys, leading them to become one of the finest ensembles of their kind. His ability to recreate music and worship based on an English cathedral model and an unparalleled standard of chorister education in the USA, catapulted TTN and STC to a position of prestige and renown that both have retained to the present day. TTN was able successfully to transplant the traditions of his homeland and his formal training, to create a unique prototype of an ancient English cathedral tradition, located within the environs of Manhattan. Today, STC and Westminster Abbey are the only two institutions that retain choir schools that exist for the sole purpose of training and educating their choristers.

The financial resources that TTN set in place, along with the congregation's desire to adopt such an un-American approach, was nothing short of extraordinary and bear witness to TTN's superlative abilities as man and musician. Ironically, he is best remembered for two unrelated accomplishments: founding the choir school of STC, and his evening canticles in B minor. The large majority of his orchestral, organ and choral output as well as the articles he published on church music are all but forgotten. His memory has been kept alive largely by STC community and their reverential recounting of his journey from York to New York – having brought something of the old world to the new.

Due to its fame and success as a flagship musical and liturgical institution, I naturally turned to STC in setting out to research the history of the Anglican choral tradition in America. Astonishingly, given that STC has a renowned tradition in promoting the music, liturgy and culture of the motherland and launching the careers of many distinguished musicians, there is no written history or extensive documentation regarding the music programme and how it developed. More significantly, there is a void of information about TTN and no account of how it all came into being. The extent of primary-source material discovered throughout the research process has been substantial. At the heart of this corpus are TTN's unpublished autobiographical memoirs, written during the final years of his life. In 1985, while conducting research for a master's degree at Yale University, Dale Adelmann discovered the Memoirs among a collection of TTN's personal items, located at the American Guild of Organists Library (AGO) at Boston University.[5] Since that discovery, the Memoirs have lain dormant; only a handful of researchers appear to have consulted them and mainly to acquire information on TTN as a composer. The difficulty in assembling research material on TTN is due, largely, to the fact that documents are held in four separate locations: the Dean and Chapter Library at York Minster; the AGO Library in Boston; the church archives of St Thomas's, and the archives of the STC choir school. Smaller, individual items are also located in the Ely Cathedral archives, the Royal College of Music and St Mary's Episcopal Church, Rockport, Massachusetts. While TTN was careful to retain his personal and professional papers throughout his life, upon his death in 1953 and that of his wife in 1958, their son, Philip, became the executor of the estate. Before Philip's death in 1979, he began to deposit his father's correspondence at York, the RCM, and STC. There is no particular rhyme or reason as to which items ended up in their respective locations; in many instances, chronologically paired letters were separated, now having been reunited through the research process. Documents in the care of the choir school and church were, in all likelihood, left by TTN following his retirement in 1943. The remaining papers, which include a series of more intimate family letters between the Nobles and their son, as well as manuscripts of works, and other correspondence, were given to the AGO library following PRN's death. Access to these primary-source documents has been critical in enabling me to correct several fundamental errors contained in earlier dissertations. As recently as 2008, it was claimed that TTN had founded the choir of men and boys at STC; in fact, he only founded the choir school.[6] STC's choir had included boys from George Warren's tenure as Organist and Choirmaster in 1870:

> They were very careful and particular in the selection of voices, as it was fully determined that the music of St. Thomas' should not be excelled by any in the city or vicinity, and they have met with complete success…The choir consists of a quartette of soloists…in addition to these singers, there is a volunteer chorus of ladies, gentlemen, and boy, twenty five in all – and all selected voices.[7]

By 1902, following the demise of the quartet, the choir consisted of only men and boys, under Warren's successor, William C. Macfarlane.[8]

The circumstances surrounding the founding of the choir school as well as the unpleasant conclusion to TTN's thirty-year tenure at STC have remained concealed. The value of their discoveries is vital to the history of church music in America and the lineage of the Anglican choral tradition.

[6] '…Thomas Tertius Noble, who composed one of the three most popular settings of the evening canticles. Noble in B minor, takes its place with Stanford in B flat and Walmisley in D minor, as one of the most sung pieces of Anglican music ever. Noble emigrated to the United States in 1913 and founded the choir and choir school at St Thomas Church, 5th Avenue, New York. So there is a case to be made that church music in the United States owes much to York Minster. This thesis has been arranged in a chronological manner to chart the development of TTN as a boy, his training, subsequent professional appointments, and conclusion of his life. Likewise, the development of the music programme of STC is best understood from a chronological perspective. A conscious decision was made to avoid any discussion of TTN's compositions, other than how they relate to the development of his character and his music programmes. TTN was clearly a gifted man in a number of areas of music; however, his compositional output could best be described at best as uneven and at worst dull, hence the conscious absence here of any analytical or evaluative commentary of his music. Instead, this thesis concentrates primarily on TTN's conspicuous gifts as an organist, choir trainer, his vision as a facilitator and for his patent love of church music.

Chapter One explores the account of TTN's childhood included in a family memoir by a distant cousin, which provides information which builds upon TTN's own memories and his curiously brief account of this period of his life. TTN's writings were more focused on being sponsored by a Colchester clergyman, Charles Everitt. Everitt was primarily responsible for Noble's social survival and his success as a musician. Noble's successful application to the newly-formed Royal College of Music in London, changed his fortunes. TTN was willing to learn and grow through hard work and discipline, and his teachers at the college sought to equip him with the best education available. Following graduation and a brief stint working for Richard Strutt at St John's Church, Wilton Road, TTN, at Stanford's persistent invitation, became his assistant at Trinity College Cambridge. Exacting details of this exchange were found in personal correspondence located in the STC archives. Stanford was to have the greatest influence upon TTN as a man and musician. Upon comparison, there are similarities between Stanford's approach and that of Noble. Noble was rooted in Stanford's philosophy such that his taste and guiding principles were set from the outset; unfortunately their respective personas created difficulties for both men at various points in their careers. TTN enjoyed all the social advantages that life in Cambridge had to offer. The relationships he formed through aristocratic members of college, particularly with Archbishop Benson's family, were undoubtedly beneficial in setting him on the path towards a cathedral post. Correspondence in the archives of STC and STCcs provides invaluable insight into TTN's personal friendships, particularly with Hugh Benson. The rift between TTN and Stanford regarding the selection of a successor at Trinity, Cambridge, forced TTN to apply for his first cathedral post at Ely (ironically, with strong support from Stanford). He was awarded the position in 1892 and the discovery of letters of recommendation in the STC archives, it is possible to understand TTN's effectiveness through the lasting relationships he formed with his colleagues and charges. Ely was able to give him opportunities to grow and develop, within the confines of a small community.

The move to York and his long tenure at the Minster, combined with his efforts in forming local instrumental ensembles, forms the crux of chapter two. York proved invaluable in the solidification of his musical and relational maturity, particularly with the York Symphony Orchestra and his civic involvement with the people of York. The liturgical experiences gained at the Minster, and the reformation of the choir school, were added tools for TTN as he was destined to face a move to a new country and way of life. His Minster predecessors, particularly E. G. Monk and John Naylor, had shaped a high-church liturgical environment, to which TTN was unaccustomed. The one great frustration for him in York was accepting local musical traditions; John Stainer and other colleagues were able to advise him on how to impose his own ideas at a more modest pace so as not to upset the entire enterprise.

TTN's relationships with the clergy at the Minster were also trying at times, and his advocating for the best music in the liturgies created tensions with the minor canons, although, crucially, he retained the constant support of the Dean. TTN oversaw the evolution of the music lists to include more contemporary music, including the addition of Stanford's 'Evening Service in G' as well as annual traditions of Handel's Messiah and the Brahms Ein Deutsches Requiem.[9] He also began to integrate his own compositions, though more cautiously than he exhibited later on at STC.

Due to TTN's many liturgical and orchestral successes in York, the musical establishment began to take notice of his achievements, and through a fortuitous meeting with a New York musician, TTN was presented with an opportunity to abandon a promising career in England. Knowing a prestigious post and knighthood were distinct possibilities, he chose, instead, a more courageous path: the frontier experience in America.

[9] Music Lists 1898-1913, MS GB-DCYM.

In Chapters Three and Four, an exhaustive account of TTN's acceptance of the offer in New York and the application of the English cathedral music tradition there is presented. The insightful information gained from his Memoirs, vestry minutes, parish yearbooks, personal letters, and interviews with the few surviving choristers and acquaintances of TTN, are extraordinarily significant and provide an invaluable contribution to the history of church music. STC tested every skill TTN gained from his sixteen years in cathedral posts in England. His success in America, though, was based more on his ability to form relationships with his rector and the men of the committee that brought him to the new world.

TTN quickly adapted to the American 'can-do' attitude of achieving goals, and through the support of Ernest M. Stires (EMS), the rector of STC, the two men, along with the chair of the music committee and senior warden of the vestry, Charles Steele, founded the choir school for the boy choristers. Precise details of the formation of the school are, for the first time, drawn from resources of the church and school archives, providing an account of the difficulties surrounding the opening of the school, and, more interestingly, the personalities behind the fund raising initiatives to support the endeavour. The premise behind the necessity of the choir school was to improve the quality of singing, and to offer to God the finest music worthy of a place such as STC. With the unwavering support of the vestry and rector, TTN was able to successfully launch the school. Additionally, through the unparalleled financial generosity of Steele, and the vision of TTN and the headmaster, Charles Benham, the school flourished into one of the most competitive boarding institutions in America.

By all accounts, TTN was a determined and driven man – to the point of being obstinate and unyielding. The relationship with his son, Philip (PRN), has provided a window into his character and furthermore, how his behaviour generated difficulties in his post at STC. A series of hundreds of letters written between TTN, his wife, and son, found in Boston, have provided unprecedented access into TTN's personal life, which might otherwise have remained a mystery. Chapter Five explores this dynamic, in addition to TTN's relationship with his second rector, Roelif Brooks. This priest and musician pairing brought about the undoing of TTN's long and prosperous reign on Fifth Avenue. The heated correspondence between TTN and the Brooks's proponents survives and was discovered, in the vestry minutes. When paired with personal letters, located two hundred miles away in Boston, they provide invaluable insight into the genuine circumstances surrounding Noble's departure from STC. In his own Memoirs, Noble hinted at difficulties with Brooks, but chose not to disclose the specific circumstances surrounding his resignation/retirement. For the last ten years of his life, TTN continued to compose and teach, having relocated to his summer home in Rockport, Massachusetts. He maintained his relationships with former students and choristers, until, due to his failing eyesight, he was no longer able to leave his home. In establishing a choir school in the English cathedral tradition at STC, TTN's unique legacy has continued to benefit and inspire generations of choristers and parishioners alike for over a century. It is hoped that it will continue to do so for many more generations to come.

The Appendix (which I hope will also act as an important source of reference in the future for scholars of American church music) contains a complete record of the music lists of STC from 1913 to 1943 which was transcribed from handwritten and printed documents located in the church archives. Discussions surrounding the repertoire are found in chapter three. Several observations include the strong dependency on oratorio as a source for anthems (as was observed at York), and the prevalence of TTN's own compositions in the liturgy. TTN, too, was always willing to condemn others for lacking variety in repertoire (see ch. 2 for discussions regarding his frustrations at York), particularly of contemporary composers. Ironically, as the years progressed, in the wake of the establishment of the STC choir school, the choir's repertoire became predictable, largely confined to TTN's anthems, canticles and hymn-tunes and established core repertoire (though there was some evidence of American composers). This completely disconnected STC from the larger world, and in particular, the new regime of English composers such as Vaughan Williams, Holst, Howells, Bairstow, Ireland and others of the inter-war period of Anglican church music which essentially marked out Noble as a conservative influence.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Reflecting on the names and faces that flood my memory for various involvements in the process of writing this thesis, I am reminded, as was TTN, of the gift of relationships. It is always a difficult task properly to thank many individuals, for fear of omissions; but it is task that I joyfully undertake as I remember those who have journeyed with me these past six years.

Without the seasoned guidance of Professor Jeremy Dibble, this project would have never materialised. From our initial meeting in 2007 to discuss the possibility of my undertaking a degree at Durham, his enthusiasm and excitement for knowledge has been contagious – always willing to provide advice, encouragement and time for students. I am also grateful to his wife, Alison, for her shared love of music and her deep sense of hospitality and refreshing honesty.

During the academic year of 2008-2009, I enjoyed the rare privilege of becoming the first American organ scholar of Durham Cathedral, in addition to beginning postgraduate work in the university music department. The year spent as part of the cathedral community changed my life, both professionally and personally. I am eternally grateful for being granted this opportunity to become a part of the ancient tradition of English cathedral society. For their encouragement and support, I wish to thank the dean, The Very Reverend Michael Sadgrove, and cathedral chapter; the cathedral choir, James Lancelot, organist and master of the choristers, and his wife, Sylvia; Keith Wright, former sub-organist (1991-2011) and his wife, Kate; Father David Sudron, former succentor and sacrist (2007-2013); Dame Gillian Weir, Anne Heywood and Lillian Groves.

To those who have encouraged me since childhood to achieve my goals, to work with a sense of duty and purpose, and to realise my love of learning and knowledge, I wish to thank Salem United Methodist Church and the First United Methodist Church of Morganton, North Carolina; Anne Starnes (deceased); Elizabeth Whitener; H. Max Smith (deceased); Douglas and Mary-Lowry Barnett (both deceased); James Bumgardner and the choir of St Mary of the Hills Church, Blowing Rock; Donna Littlejohn; Jane Comfort Brown; Julia Pedigo; Elizabeth Rose; Brian Bailey; Marcia Citron; Frances Anderson; and Ann Coiner.

For my employers past and present: The Reverend Hannah Atkins and Trinity Episcopal Church, Houston, for granting me the opportunity of my first professional appointment; and for St Mark's Episcopal Church, San Antonio and the Reverend Michael Chalk (retired), the Reverend Ned Bowersox (retired) and the Reverend Elizabeth Knowlton, for their support, flexibility, and encouragement over the past four years.

I must also mention Dale Adelmann and Neal Campbell for representing, to me, the value of scholarship in America and in the world of church music.

The task of compiling the details of Noble's life would not have been possible without the enthusiastic support of many individuals. I wish to express my sincerest gratitude to Mrs Yolanda Tietjen-Fitzgerald and Andrea Tietjen Merrill; William Weigle; John Papps; Clarence Bodine (deceased); John Riedell; Lindsay Lindenbaum; St Thomas Church and St Thomas Church Choir School; John Scott; The Reverend Charles Wallace; Ruth Cobb; Gerre Hancock (deceased); and The Reverend Andrew Mead. I am especially indebted to my friend, Judith Moore, retired music librarian and archival assistant of St Thomas Church, for her unwavering support in this project, and for being a constant presence from the beginning of this endeavour.

To the archivists and libraries possessing TTN's papers, I wish to give particular thanks to the American Guild of Organists Library of Boston University, Simmone Ronk; the Dean and Chapter Library of York Minster, Peter Young and Robert Sharpe; the Ely Cathedral Archives, Elizabeth Stazicker; and the Royal College of Music, Peter Horton.

For their tireless energies, I must profusely thank Giles Brightwell for his proofreading of the thesis and for offering guidance through the final months of this project; and to Catherine Reed for her innumerable hours of providing 'computer genius' in helping to organise the data collected in the appendix.

Finally, I wish to express my thanks to James O'Donnell and Nauro Medeiros for their extraordinary hospitality and friendship; to my family, for their unconditional love and support; and to Robert Brewer for his love, patience, energy and encouragement, and without whom this project would have never been completed.

CHAPTER ONE

The Early Years, 1867-1898

1.1 Birth and family background

Thomas Tertius Noble (hereafter TTN), the founder of the choir school for boys of St Thomas Church, New York City, was born in Bath, England, on 5 May 1867. TTN was the ninth and youngest child of Thomas and Sarah Noble of No 5 Elm Place.[1] The circumstances of TTN's family background are unclear and what information exists largely relies upon disparate strands. He spoke of his childhood in his unpublished memoirs, dictated during the final years of his life; other knowledge, particularly related to the Noble family history, is found in a family document, written by a distant cousin some fifty years following his death in 1953.[2]

The name Tertius was derived from his father and grandfather bearing the same Christian name of Thomas; thus Tertius being the third. Grandfather Noble born in 1800, later married and set-up house at No 6 Albion Place. In 1828, grandfather Noble's only child, father Thomas, was born.[3]

The Nobles were a successful working class family, having owned and operated a jewellry business since 1826; in modern times this would be classified as the equivalent of a pawn shop and most certainly not a high street boutique. Grandfather Noble was an astute businessman, and from the time of his son's birth he orchestrated plans for father Noble to succeed him as the primary operator of the jewellry enterprise.[4] This model of family succession was standard procedure during the period.[5]

Grandfather Noble, too, was over-bearing and controlling. Even though his son showed great talent in music, he deliberately educated him in order that he might follow him into the business.[6]

At the age of eleven Father Thomas was sent to the grammar school in the cathedral city of Wells. This little city is on the southern slopes of the Mendip Hills about fifteen miles from Bath so he was only a short distance from his home. He was a boarder at this expensive school where most of the pupils would have been destined to careers in the Church. Not so Noble! Grandfather Noble intended his son to have a good liberal education that would have impressed the wealthy customers of the jewellry shop. A good education gives one confidence, a valuable attribute when dealing with wealth and perhaps membership of the peerage and even junior members of royalty.[7]

When father Noble returned home from school, he soon realized that his life was to take on a quite different direction from that for which he was educated.[8] Victorian sensibilities and morals were an inevitable characteristic of English life, and he knew that he dared not argue with his father over the future of his livelihood. He took his place in the business, just as grandfather Noble had planned, and although he was poised to earn a respectable living, a series of disputes and unwise financial decisions led him down an unfortunate path, which ultimately left the family destitute and scattered to the four winds, dissipated and mired in scandal.

In 1867, the year of TTN's birth, father Noble's household consisted of two adults, supporting nine children, all under the age of twelve. He spent his days working in the shop, barely earning enough money to make ends meet. Eventually, he began borrowing money from his father and from the business account; these debts were never to be repaid.[9] Grandfather Noble died on 1 June 1880, instructing the firm of Soane & Bell to act as executers of his will. Upon the reading of the will, father Noble learned that due to the debts he left at his father's death, he was:

[to] inherit no money neither was any money left to his wife Sarah. The will permitted him to retain as his own all the money he had borrowed from his Father. Father Noble in the very depths of despair sought the only way out he could envisage. He had to get away from it all. With money in his pocket Father Thomas Noble deserted his wife and those still remaining at home (including TTN). [10]

Father Noble's wife, Sarah, faced with financial and social ruin, sought any way possible to shield her children from public disgrace. She fled to Ramsgate, to be with family, leaving TTN in Bath to live with his eldest sibling, Edith.[11] TTN's memories of these days, particularly leading up to the family demise, were surprisingly happy ones and mostly centred around his religious formation and conviction:

My religious training began at an early age. My mother was a most devout Christian soul. She loved to take her flock to church on Sunday morning. Our church was St. Luke's, and the service held there was a very evangelical one, with a choir of men and women, commonly called in my boyhood days a 'cock and hen' choir! My eldest sister, having a sweet voice, sang in this choir.[12]

At the time TTN was sent to live with his sister, he was thirteen years of age. He later recalled ruefully (though largely ignorant of the actual causes): 'through a series of family disputes and bad financial decisions, my father was no longer with us.'[13] It is likely he was never made fully aware of the exact details of his father's desertion. Fortunately, however, TTN's sister provided him with a stable home environment that allowed him to focus on his strongest interest: music. She had already begun instructing him in music lessons when he was younger, noticing that he possessed a natural talent.[14]

1.2 Charles Everitt and All Saints' Colchester

The year before the family break-up, when TTN was twelve, he made the acquaintance of a clergyman, Charles Everitt. Everitt was a recently-retired Minor Canon from Gloucester Cathedral and had taken a smaller parish post as Rector of [14] 'At about the age of seven, my eldest sister, Edith, took charge of my music lessons, giving me daily instruction in scales and exercises, the latter of Czerny and Cramer. All Saints' Church in Colchester. In 1879, while staying with friends in Bath, Everitt enquired whether there was a musical boy locally who might benefit from his patronage and whom he could educate and train as a potential cathedral organist.[15] During this period it was not uncommon for clergy to search out those from comparatively disadvantaged backgrounds in order to act as their mentor and guardian.[16] Everitt saw TTN as a very talented young man, and upon learning of his family situation, he kept close tabs on him, seeking an opportune moment potentially to aid the Noble family. Following the 1880 scandal (of which Everitt most assuredly was aware), and TTN's living with his sister, Everitt wrote to TTN's mother in Ramsgate and invited TTN to visit him in Colchester. Noble recalled:

> This visit, which was intended to last not more than two weeks, continued for nine months, for very soon after my arrival, I was appointed organist of All Saints' Church, the former musician in charge graciously resigning her post when the Rector informed her that he wished me to be his organist, while he took the responsibility of training the choir of men and boys. My salary was to be twenty pounds a year. This seemed a great deal of money, and I felt quite important and wealthy.[17]

This escape for TTN proved fruitful, both musically and socially. He was placed in an environment where his talent was developed and where education was of high importance. At All Saints', Everitt not only served as rector, but his role in training the choir was also considerable; initially he took the boys' practices and full rehearsals. As TTN matured musically, he was permitted, at an impressionable age, to take rehearsals alone where he gained invaluable experience.

> The work of the choir was an important part of my life. The boys rehearsed three times a week; and there was a full rehearsal every Friday night. The full rehearsal was always conducted by Mr Everitt who was not only an excellent musician, but also possessed a very good tenor voice. He had studied voice production under Sir Joseph Barnby, who was looked upon as one of the leading authorities of his age. As Mr Everitt was an exceedingly busy man in his parish, I frequently had to take the choirboy rehearsals. As I was nothing more than a youngster myself, it was not an easy matter to have an entirely successful practice, but, generally speaking, we got along all right, for by now I could manage to play the piano fairly well. This was undoubtedly a great help.[18] [18] Ibid., pp. 2-3.

For Everitt, TTN's social and intellectual formation was no less important; he became well versed in the art of gentlemanly behaviour, attitudes and deportment.[19] In the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries, the clergy enjoyed an elevated social status. Often well-educated and from the aristocracy or gentry, they could also be independently wealthy and the possessors of richly-stocked libraries that included many of the great musical and literary works. To the young TTN, Everitt's verbal guidance and physical resources must have seemed like a treasure-trove to a boy from modest social circumstances. Additionally, Everitt also sought outside musical instruction for TTN:

> Besides having private organ lessons with a Mr Nunn, I took up piano and harmony work, so with two hours a day at the organ, at the piano, and at paper work and at least three hours devoted to general education my day was a very full one. All this was considered essential by Mr Everitt, who was a just but severe taskmaster. He taught me how to work, a fundamental lesson that should be learned, when one is very young.[20]

1.3 The Royal College of Music

Following TTN's continued success at Colchester, Everitt thought it best to consider the next step in his protegé's proper musical education.[21] The Royal College of Music in London (RCM) was founded in 1883, and with Everitt's encouragement, TTN sought to apply for the very first round of available Open Scholarships in April that year. His organ audition consisted of only the slow movement from Mendelssohn's Fourth Sonata. Rather self-assured, TTN was naturally discouraged when he failed [19] 'The rectory, which was my home while I lived in Colchester, was a fine house with a large garden at the back. Six goats were kept in this garden, therefore there was plenty of, perhaps rather too much, goat's milk available. Other than the goats, I recall that from time to time backward students lived with us. These were generally university undergraduates from various colleges who had to be crammed for their exams. One of these, Robert Henry Hobert Cust, who had been educated at Eton, came to the rectory to brush up his studies in order to retake examinations he had failed to pass at Oxford. (TTN Memoirs, ch. 2, p. 2).

[20] Ibid., Mr Nunn, to whom TTN referred was Robert Lindley Nunn (1822-1899). Nunn was educated at Cambridge (Mus. Bac. 1867) and organist of St. Mary-le-Tower, Ipswich. He often performed concerts and taught in the surrounding areas, including Colchester. (see Robert Lindley Nunn, Musical Reflections of more than half a century, Ipswich: W. E. Harrison, 1899).

[21] It is ironic that TTN pursued a similar musical path to his father's childhood training, and due to the absence of his father, a total stranger provided an avenue for his success. TTN later remarked on this coincidence and the unfortunate fate his grandfather's decision had on his father: 'I am convinced that if he had possessed the hardness of character to fight and win against his tyrannical parent, my father's chances of having a useful musical career would have been favourable. Instead, he worked for a number of years in his father's shop, hating it more and more as time slipped by.' (TTN Memoirs, ch. 2, p. 2).

to achieve the scholarship; this was instead awarded to Herbert Brewer (1865-1928), later organist of Gloucester Cathedral.[22] It was a salutary experience as TTN noted, 'When the results were announced, I wasn't even among the first fifty! I found my level and went back home a humbler and wiser youngster.'[23] Following this disappointment and healthy dose of reality, Everitt made an attempt to help TTN become acquainted with other well-known musicians, hoping they could help by guiding, tutoring and refining his skills as an organist.

One such musician happened to be a fellow clergyman, the Rev'd Sir Frederick Arthur Gore Ouseley (1825-1889). Everitt attempted to persuade Ouseley that TTN was suitable material for St Michael's College, Tenbury - a music school founded by Ouseley in 1856 and where many young organists had cut their teeth during their early careers.[24] Unfortunately, Ouseley, spoilt by a glut of capable boys and would-be organists, advised TTN that it would be far better if he learned a good trade.[25] Rather than deter TTN, this only strengthened his resolve to try again for the RCM, knowing that he was following a path of his own choosing even if it was not the most practical and pecunious option.

In 1885, TTN successfully entered the RCM, initially paying his own tuition.[26] He studied the organ with Walter Parratt (1841-1924) and formed a strong mentored

The choristers were to benefit from Ouseley's second aim at St Michael's - the provision of a good grammar school education.' relationship that lasted until Parratt's death.[27] In 1886, Herbert Brewer had to give up his scholarship at the RCM owing to illness, so TTN auditioned for the vacancy and this time he was successful.[28]

Throughout his time in London, TTN was fortunate: in addition to being one of Parratt's organ students, he studied harmony with Frederick Bridge (1844-1924) and composition with Charles Villiers Stanford (1852-1924).[29] TTN wryly recalled his teachers:

> I did intensive organ study with Sir Walter Parratt, harmony and counterpoint with Sir Frederick Bridge and composition with Sir Charles V. Stanford. These were undoubtedly the 'big three' of their period, and strange to say, all these men lived to be over eighty and died in 1924 within ten days of each other. Sir Walter was a born teacher with a keen ear and clear brain. He possessed a personality which glowed with sunshine and, of the three men, was the most brilliant. During the years I studied under him, I rarely saw this patient soul in the least bit ruffled. Occasionally he was very bored, for some of his pupils were not gifted. Once, when giving a lesson to a very unmusical but immaculately clad young man, his comment was devastatingly sarcastic. After this student had played his piece through in a very wooden fashion Sir Walter asked him to play it again, this time with more musical feeling. 'Oh, Sir Walter, do you want more Swell?' asked the student. 'No, sir,' was Sir Walter's reply, 'We already have enough of that on the organ bench!'
> Sir Frederick Bridge possessed a keen sense of humour, and was always very much in demand as an after dinner speaker for he was brilliant in this capacity. At his classes he showed searching wit. I remember so well in my early days at the Royal College that in class one morning he held up before the students a sample of my counterpoint in which there were a number of rests. With a grin, he remarked, 'Who would pay half-a-crown an hour to hear this?'
> Stanford was always thoroughly aware of his abilities and expressed them with amazing energy. Though respected and admired as a musician, particularly as a teacher of composition, he was one of the most difficult men to get along with, unless you understood him thoroughly, for his moods were many and varied.[30]

Stanford would have the greatest influence upon TTN during these early years, for following his time at the RCM, he would ask him to take up the post of his assistant at Trinity College Cambridge. TTN recalled Stanford as a teacher, his irascibility, his impatience with slovenly work and how he would have had to develop a resilience to his teacher's uncompromising manner:

[27] TTN and Parratt corresponded throughout TTN's career, even after moving to New York (MS US-BUAGO and US-STCcs).
[28] Ibid., p.4.
[29] Letter from TTN to his mother, 22 May 1886 (MS US-UBAGO). 'I had a very nice composition lesson from Dr. Stanford on Tuesday - he was pleased with my "minuet and trio." I have another to do for him by next Wednesday. I have only written one line at present. Dr. Bridge was also very pleased with my counterpoint. Of course, Mr. Parratt was very nice; he is never otherwise. [signed] your ever loving son, Terch.'
[30] TTN Memoirs, ch. 2, pp. 4-5.

Both as his student in composition, and later, as his assistant at Trinity College Cambridge, I grew to know the man well. As a teacher he had the ability, in most cases, to get the very best out of his pupils. He would often glance hastily at my manuscript, sometimes tear it up, and throw the contents into the waste paper basket, after which he would go to the piano and extemporize magnificently for five minutes, finally exclaiming: 'Now, my boy, go home, and eat a box of chocolates, and next week, model your work on what you have just heard me play!'[31]

While TTN enjoyed the many benefits, both social and musical, of the RCM, there remained one issue that he perpetually struggled to overcome: his lack of money. Due to Everitt's training and connections, TTN had the rare opportunity to pursue a career that was often not available to a person of his background, and, what is more, music assisted in elevating him into a level of English society that was well beyond his financial means but commensurate with his intellectual and musical abilities (a meritocratic attribute consistent with American ideals). Nevertheless, living above one's means did cause financial problems, and his pecuniary situation, even with the assistance of a scholarship, was strained.

1.4 St Johns' Church, Wilton Road

Without the benefit of an allowance from his family, and the fact TTN's scholarship failed to provide sufficient funds to support even modest living expenses, he sought additional work as a freelance organist. In the autumn of 1888, a fortuitous meeting took place between the hymn-tune composer and amateur musician, Richard Strutt and TTN. Strutt was the brother of Lord Rayleigh, one of Britain's most distinguished scientists of the day.

[TTN] 'I first met Mr Strutt when he was staying at Holly Trees, Colchester, the home of James Round, M. P. , who with his family, was a member of All Saints' church. When I was invited to play to Mr Strutt I little realized that he was looking for an organist for a London church in which he was invested. After my abilities for this position had been thoroughly tested, Mr Strutt at once approached Mr Everitt in regard to my becoming connected with St Johns' church…Once offered this post, I did not hesitate to accept. St Johns' which during the German air raids in the last war was levelled to the ground, was connected with fashionable St Peter's, Eaton Square. St Peter's at that time possessed one of the finest choirs In London.[32]

[32] TTN Memoirs, ch. 3, p.1.

St Johns' served as a chapel-of-ease to the grand, parent church, St Peter's.[33] Presumably, St Johns' served the lower social classes connected with St Peter's; many wealthy churches in NYC were connected to similar chapels.[34] The St John's post gave TTN the opportunity for sole responsibility for the music in the church, with Strutt serving as honourary choirmaster, taking charge of only occasional full rehearsals.[35] TTN was also faced with living on his own for the first time in his life. The nine years of comfort and privilege at the Colchester rectory were traded for dingy lodgings in rented quarters.[36]

TTN, too, became acquainted with the rector of St Jude's Parish, Shoreditch, when he was invited to assist with the music for the dedication of new church and parish house buildings.[37] The rector, Father Jay, helped to open TTN's eyes to the realities of poverty and the church's role in assisting the less fortunate. Father Jay was also something of a comedian and once remarked in regard to the hundreds of children and wayfarers in his charge, 'I look east, I look west, I look north, I look [34] St. John's prepared TTN for working in his future establishments, musically, and in the case of St. Thomas's in New York City, working in charitable and fundamental situations (particularly associating with lower classes) was helpful in aiding and showing surface-level interest in the music program of STC's chapel.

[35] TTN Memoirs, ch. 3, p.1. Noble adds that he experienced difficulty with the London boys: 'Only those who have to deal with these rascals know what they are like.' TTN's experience at St John's proved comprehensive, such that Parratt wrote a strong recommendation based on his work there: 'the music there is very elaborate. The services are most successful. Mr Noble is an excellent trainer of boys for solo or for chorus work. (blanket recommendation letter from Walter Parratt, 17 June 1890, MS US-STC).

[36] TTN described his living situation as 'dingy' although he lived on Cambridge Street in the Pimlico district of London. From all accounts of the period, this was a well-to-do area, thus the inconsistency with TTN's complaint. Another musician of the period, Basil Harwood (1859-1949), also resided in this neighbourhood while serving as organist of St. Barnabas Church (1883-1887). (see Peter Harwick, British Organ Music of the Twentieth Century, Lanham: Scarecrow Press, Inc., 2003, p. 28).

[37] 'Father Jay had one of the toughest parishes in the east end of London. At the time I met him a new church and parish house were nearing completion. I was invited to take charge of the music at the Dedication Service of this church. Of course Mr Strutt was present, sitting in the chancel with the choir as the boys and men sang the choral Eucharist. The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Temple, took the service, and was assisted by Father Jay and Mr. Holdern, the priest in charge of St John's, Wilton Road.' (TTN Memoirs, ch. 3, p.2).

south, and it is Abraham and his seed for ever.'[38] Shortly after arriving at St. John's, TTN graduated from the RCM, performing well in his exams.[39] It was also at this time he achieved an impressive result in his ARCM examination. Upon graduation, he was placed on the staff of the College as an organ teacher (a great surprise to TTN!).[40]

During the late 1880s TTN turned increasingly to composition. He wrote, among other works:

> …a Theme and variations in D flat for organ. This was published by Augener and Company. For the copyright I [TTN] received two handsomely bound volumes of W. T. Best's arrangements for the organ of the works of Handel plus a few free copies of my own work. I gladly signed the above agreement with the publisher, my youthful ardour delighted at the prospect of seeing my work in print for the first time![41]

TTN's compositions brought forth many fruitful relationships with famous composers of the day. He was not shy in sending his works out for criticism, which, in turn, drew much attention to his youthful efforts.[42] A most interesting correspondence took place with Joseph Rheinberger (1839-1901), a composer TTN admired and respected. Noble's Solemn March in E flat minor was dedicated to him in gratitude for his kindness.

> High honoured Sir,
> You have the kind wish to dedicate [fine] your "Solemn March" and ask me for the permission to do so. With the greatest pleasure and I ready accept the kind and thoughtful honour and thank you most heartily for it. I think your "March" is well inspired, well worked out, will make a good effect and sound very well. If you wish me return the M.S. kindly send me a Post card to that effect.

[39] TTN graduated in 1886, at the age of nineteen having enjoyed four terms as a Student and nine terms as a Foundation Scholar. His final examination occurred on 16 March 1886 and he received first-class marks in organ and composition. (Paperwork reports GB-RCM).

[40] Ibid., p. 3. TTN held this post until December of 1897, when he resigned to accept the post of Organist and Choirmaster of York Minister.

[42] TTN was in frequent communication with William Thomas Best (1826-1897), perhaps because Best enjoyed a reputation as one of the great virtuoso concert organists of his day…He often sent musical examples by post to Best, which in turn Best would answer, offering advice, or at times, harsh criticism: 'Bad news again! After your 1st published essay I am disappointed that you didn't advance in a marked manner.' (Letter from W. T. Best to TTN, 27 March 1889, MS US-STC).

Parratt took note of his successes in his early compositions and persuaded him to write an Evening Service, using Walmisley's 'Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D minor' as a model:

> I dedicated the work in the key of B minor to Sir George Martin, then the organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. For two years, I could find no publisher who would accept these efforts of a young composer. All the leading houses in London turned me down in spite of the fact that Parratt, Stanford, Bridge and Martin recommended the music and offered to sing it when it was published. Eventually, it was taken by Houghton & Company, of Great Marlborough Street, a new firm owned by Edgar Pettman. As soon as the music was printed, it was immediately sung in St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, the Temple Church, and many other English Cathedrals. Novello & Company, who had turned down the manuscript, were kept busy securing copies from Houghton & Company for the many orders that came in for my Evening Canticles.
>
> I have always felt deeply grateful to Parratt for having asked me to write this B minor service. Had he not done so, I am sure there would have never been a Noble in B minor.[44]

1.5 Stanford and Trinity College Cambridge

In April 1890, after gaining recognition as an up-and-coming composer, and from his productive work at St Johns', TTN received a letter from Stanford, inviting him to consider the post of becoming his assistant at Trinity College Cambridge. TTN was apprehensive about the position and wrote to Stanford stating 'I can not make a hasty decision,' and did nothing more about the position until another letter arrived from Stanford, again offering the appointment.[45] TTN recalled his thoughts at the time:

> To leave London was a difficult decision to make. Before making up my mind, I naturally talked the matter over with older men such as Parratt, Martin, and others who through their friendship had shown they were interested in my future. All these men advised me to accept Stanford's offer. Then I had to see Richard Strutt (of St. John's). I need hardly say the blow was a severe one for us both, for through working together we had become close friends, and I know from what he had said that he hoped I would stay in London for several years. It did not take a great deal of thought on my part to see that it would not have been a wise move to stay at St. John's, Wilton Road. The close association with a man of Stanford's professional abilities as well as the many other opportunities at the University of Cambridge would undoubtedly be maturing influences.[46]

While Stanford recognized TTN's abilities, so too did other mentors at the RCM. Even Sir George Grove (1820-1900), the director of the College, took a keen interest in him because he was aware, not only of his talent but also of his impecunious background. Grove's extra attention, which TTN gratefully received, took the form of attending concerts at the Crystal Palace where he was a director. Such concerts for TTN also provided fillip for his growing passion for orchestral music and orchestral conducting:

> Sir George frequently took me [TTN] to the Crystal Palace to hear a symphony concert conducted by August Manns. At one of these performances I remember hearing Brahms's Fourth Symphony for the first time. I shall never forget how Sir George was thrilled by the great music. I listened with intense interest but was not able to digest this work at a first hearing, especially the last movement, a passacaglia. At that period it seemed very revolutionary in character, though I was amazed at the vitality and force of Brahms's free counterpoint and the glowing magnificence of the orchestral scoring. When this work was first performed in England [under Hans Richter], I well remember the controversy that erupted among the music critics, and at a time when the music of Brahms was being much more cordially received in England than in Germany.'[47]

Stanford would have also encouraged TTN to take an interest in music outside the organ repertoire. However, he was also anxious to secure his pupil's employment at Trinity College. In a letter he wrote to TTN on the 10 June, he responded to TTN's favourable inclination, stating 'I certainly hope if this is so, that you will let me propose you to the [college] council.' Five days later TTN confirmed his acceptance of Stanford's offer to which he responded, 'I am much pleased to hear your decision, which I am sure is wise, and you will not regret it, I feel confident.[48] Upon arrival in Cambridge, TTN found himself surrounded by a class of young men from backgrounds far more grand than he had experienced at the RCM. He was now a part of a gentleman's world, for which Everitt had prepared him during his years in Colchester.

Musically, TTN's skills were primed for utilization in coping with the full choir schedule at Trinity. He learned that the art of building (or rebuilding) a choir programme from scratch, rather than perpetuating perceived perfection was not to be underestimated. Being Stanford's assistant provided TTN with more direct responsibility with the inner-workings of the choir than any previous post. Due to his many responsibilities in London, Stanford was often away from Cambridge and left the lion's share of the work of training the choir at Trinity to his assistants; as a result, one of the important responsibilities TTN took on with his new position was to teach the boys to sing.[49] Stanford warned TTN that the choir was very run down and that there would be much work to do to improve its vocal quality.[50]

The most interesting of all the chapel services for TTN was the service on Sunday evening. Stanford was almost always present and his organ-playing and improvisations were substantial.[51] The many great musicians who visited Trinity Chapel were also of note. In 1891, Antonin Dvořák visited Cambridge in order to receive his honorary D. Mus. from the university and is known to have accompanied Stanford in the organ loft during at least one service. In 1893, during the Jubilee of the Cambridge University Musical Society, for which TTN was the organist, four composers, Saint-Saëns, Bruch, Tchaikovsky and Boïto all visited Cambridge for the conferral of their doctorates and also took part in one concert together.[52] They were also, as TTN recollected, present at a service of Mattins in Trinity College Chapel:

> Trinity Chapel could be a very interesting place, for Stanford had among his friends and acquaintances a number of famous men. I remember one Sunday morning being asked to act as page boy during the service. Upon arriving in the organ-loft I was introduced to Dvorak, Tschaikovsky, Saint-Saens and the Italian poet and composer, Boito, all in Cambridge to receive honorary degrees. That morning most of the music was by Stanford. Among the living composers of his period, Stanford had a deep sense of Johannes Brahms's greatness and importance as a composer. I remember distinctly his respect for and devotion to the music of the German master. As a boy of 15 he heard a work of Brahms for the first time, the orchestral variations on a theme of Haydn. Of this experience Stanford wrote in his book Studies and Memories, 'I shall never forget the amazing effect which was produced on me.'[53]

Stanford's reverence for Brahms had also established itself publically at Cambridge when he facilitated the first English performance of Brahms's First Symphony in [51] Among the many Chapel events, the Sunday evening service was the most inspiring. Its utter simplicity of approach gave it strength and power, and these qualities were attained when at least three fine hymns were sung in unison by the 700 white-robed undergraduates present. On these occasions Stanford was at his very best. The hymns, if too high, were transposed into keys that suited the voices of the men in the pews, and while they sang with the vitality and power of youth, Stanford would play the most glorious free organ part round the tune. Many of the residents of Cambridge came regularly to these services and, because there was no room in the main chapel, sat in the antechapel behind the organ screen. (TTN Memoirs, ch. 4, pp.1-2).

March 1877, at which Joachim received an honorary doctorate. His hope on this occasion to entice Brahms to Cambridge to receive an honorary degree was unavailing as it was in 1893 when both Brahms and Verdi turned down their invitations.[54]

Although TTN was not a student of the college, due to his youthful age (early twenties), he often enjoyed the active social life and made friendships amongst the more aristocratic members of the institution.[55] One such member was Hugh Benson (HB), the youngest son of the then archbishop of Canterbury, Edward Benson (1829-1896).[56] TTN became very close to HB and he spent a great deal of time in the company of the Benson family.[57] The friendship with HB and his parents was the first substantial relationship TTN had formed to date, outside of his professional ones with his teachers at the RCM.[58] TTN and HB found themselves having much in common and a natural rapport ensued, but TTN likely also realized the implications

[55] There is little mention of TTN's social interactions during his years in London and the RCM. He was undoubtedly interested in the life-style of the Cambridge undergraduates. Following his near-poverty experience in London and his unfortunate childhood, this was TTN's opportunity to re-invent himself as a gentleman and to position himself for his future career as a musician.

[56] Benson served as archbishop of Canterbury from 1883 until his sudden death of a heart attack in 1896. Benson is best known for his development of a service of Nine Lessons and Carols, while he was Bishop of Truro in 1880. This service was later adapted in 1918 by the Dean of King's College, Cambridge, Eric Milner White. (see worldwide website http://www.kings.cam.ac.uk/events/chapel-services/nine-lessons/history.html, accessed 21 September 2014). Benson was father to six children. His son, A. C. Benson was the author of Land of Hope and Glory.

[57] 'During Hugh's holidays, which were often spent either at Lambeth Palace, London, or Addington Park, Croydon, the summer home of the Archbishop of Canterbury, I was a frequent visitor at one or the other of his father's homes.' (TTN Memoirs, ch. 4, p. 4). TTN and HB were very connected, 'His love for music was very genuine and this was, no doubt, the main reason we became such close friends.' (Ibid). The two young men corresponded well past their time in Cambridge, with Benson often writing to TTN sharing bits of gossip, personal information, and humorous sketches telling of his exotic travels and quirky happenings.

[58]Another friend within TTN's inner-circle was Cyril E. Martineau. Martineau's American connections are of particular interest. 'Cyril was a very popular man, and belonged to all the exclusive clubs in the University. Later in 1912 he was very much interested in my [TTN] first visit to the United States, for he married into the Delano family and, therefore was related to Mrs. James Roosevelt. Before I left England in December 1912, he wrote to Mrs. Roosevelt about my forthcoming recital tour. When I arrived in New York early in January, I was invited to lunch at her home one Sunday. I need hardly say that I found this very charming lady a wonderful hostess. Her son, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who later was to make history, was present on that occasion. He was at that time an extraordinarily good-looking man, strong and vigorous. His conversation was vitally concerned with the political situation of that period.' (TTN Memoirs, ch. 4, p. 6).

of socializing with the archbishop of Canterbury and how this might aid his desire for a more socially elevated career as a cathedral organist.

Through working with Stanford, the name of T. Tertius Noble became well known in musical circles. After turning down several offers for London parish churches, TTN found himself in an interesting situation. Stanford resigned from Trinity in May of 1892 (his last service was at Christmas that same year) and TTN had strong feelings that he should be his successor. He made his intent clear to Stanford, to which Stanford 'bluntly told me that he could not support me, and he had promised to nominate a former pupil, Alan Gray, who was music-master at Wellington College.'[59] TTN's desire for this position did not wane, however, knowing that the College Council, and not Stanford, would make the ultimate decision. Finally, the results were announced and Gray was given the post. TTN was devastated and took the first train to Windsor to talk things over with Parratt who stoically assured him that all would turn out for the best. TTN later recalled:

> As I now look back over the years with a much more seasoned experience of life, I know that the Council did the right thing. Though my reaction had been sincere, it had not been wise. Had I been appointed, I might easily have frivolled my life away, for I was associating with a very rich and smart set of young men who indulged frequently in champagne breakfasts and sumptuous dinners. I think Stanford probably realized this, and with reason deliberately steered me from a path, which might have led to disaster.[60]

1.6 Ely Cathedral

True to form, something did come along. Basil Harwood, of Ely Cathedral was offered and accepted the post at Christ Church Oxford, and TTN in-turn applied for Ely with hearty recommendations and was awarded the position. Significantly, Stanford's support for TTN's application was robust:

> Mr T. T. Noble is in every respect most admirably fitted for the post of a cathedral organist. He is equally successful as a player as an accompanist and as a choirmaster; and has the rare gift of inspiring his forces with enthusiasm and making himself thoroughly popular with them. During his residence at Cambridge as Assistant Organist at Trinity College, he has won golden opinions from all sides.[61]

During the summer of 1892, TTN travelled on holiday to Europe with the Strutt family without hearing from Ely about his potential appointment. This was his first trip outside of England and the experience opened his eyes and ears to a world of opera (particularly Wagner), rich food and culture. TTN considered his time at Bayreuth a great educational experience. There he was able to hear performances of Tristan und Isolde and Parsifal conducted by Hermann Levi. He was thrilled by the solo singing but even more so by the choral sounds.[62] While abroad, he received a letter from Ely dated 5 September 1892:

> Dear Mr. Noble, I suppose you may about this time be getting back to England. Enclosed you will find a copy of the Chapter Order appointing you. As soon as you get it, will you write a suitable letter to the Dean, accepting the appointment? You might refer to the fact that owing to your absence from England, you had not before received formal notice. The terms seem rigorous – as though the organist might never be absent from any service. I fancy they are the same as have been in previous cases. It is understood that a deputy may occasionally be employed, but the Chapter reserves the right of disapproving.
>
> Yours sincerely,
> V. H. Stanton[63]

TTN recalled: 'When I returned to England after these delightful holidays, I realized that I should not only have one of the most beautiful of the English cathedrals in which to work, but also a house in the College, Ely, in which to live. But I faced a predicament: I had not furniture of my own!'[64] This appointment was his debut on the solo stage. Armed with a proper gentlemanly education, world-class musical training and sufficient savoir faire, TTN was given a cathedral of his own – a place where his skills in music and life could be fully tested. As he commented: 'As a young musician coming to a cathedral for the first time I felt the challenge of this rich heritage, of this subtle, beautiful environment. The dream of some-day becoming the organist and choirmaster of a cathedral had materialized.'[65]

Upon entering a new post as organist, one often encounters an intriguing atmosphere of politics and personalities – the dangerous unknown. Intuition can safely guide but ego and stubbornness can make for unwanted difficulties. TTN was certainly of the generation where the persona of the musician was almost equally as important as his skills in choir-training and organ performance. Likewise, the persona (or ego) of the clergy was also highly influential in the eyes of the public. In the cathedral tradition, the most important personality with which to be in sympathy was the Precentor. He had (and still retains) total authority over music and planning of the liturgies. At Ely TTN discovered for the first time how these professional inter-relationships could exert a major bearing on musical activities. His situation was trying, but certainly not impossible. In his Memoirs his predicament was measured in terms of musical taste and how this influenced the formation of the music lists. The standpoint of 'musical taste' was one that undoubtedly had been impressed on him by Stanford, both as a student and as assistant at Trinity:

> Musical taste in the church service as in the concert hall or in the opera house is a highly debatable subject. Sooner or later, the church musician must from his background, training, and experience, make definite decisions about what is worthy to be played and sung in the House of God. As one who was born in the Victorian era, and whose judgments are determined by years of experience in the Anglican Church, in England and the Episcopal Church, in the United States, my decisions have been built on a very simple formula. I have always tried to be fair and catholic in my tastes. It has been my policy to condemn poor music, not any particular school of composition.[66]

TTN was in fact fully aware that his senior predecessors had also experienced challenging and often trying relationships with their clergy. As he remarked: 'Such men as Stanford, Bridge and Parratt were persecuted by their respective precentors.'[67] He, too, recounted his colourful relationship with his superiors at Ely:

> When I was appointed to Ely Cathedral, Dean Merivale, a splendid character and grandfather of the distinguished actor, was ninety-four years old, but amazingly alert for his age. Other than the Dean there was the Bishop, Lord Alwyn Compton, six major canons, and four minor canons. Though these men expressed their ideas about the type of music which was sung, it was Canon Dixon the Precentor, who by law has the right to choose the music in connection with the services, with whom I had to deal. When the Precentor exercises, as he often does in a most stupid fashion, the letter of the [66] Ibid., p. 3. Stanford's views on musical taste and his views on the relationship between choirmaster and Precentor (or chaplain) were thoroughly articulated in his essay 'The Choice of Church Music in Church Choirs', Proceedings of the Church Congress, London 1899, 420-4 (repr. in Stanford 1908, 61-9). It also evident from TTN's Memoirs that he was thoroughly aware of this lecture (see ch. 5, p. 4).

[67] TTN Memoirs, ch. 5, pp. 3-4.

law rather than the spirit, then the fat is in the fire, and the sizzling is heard round the entire cathedral precincts.[68]

Both Canon Dixon and TTN were strong-headed and disagreed with some regularity; however, there was a certain level of mutual respect that kept the fight even and fair. TTN did call-to-mind the first major disagreement being over the singing of Stanford's Morning Service in B flat major. He was told such frivolous, trivial stuff, was utterly unworthy of God's House.[69] Of course, it immediately became part of the repertoire (!).

TTN found the choir to be in excellent shape, in particular, the boys' voices. His predecessor, Basil Harwood, had done excellent work. There was a methodical and carefully-planned repertoire (albeit more limited than he would ultimately accept) which was necessitated by the daily singing of Matins and Evensong at this period:

In spite of the controversies which were preparing me for even harder battles for the cause of church music at York Minster, I thoroughly enjoyed the daily services of Matins and Evensong. There were fourteen choral services there a week for which I had to prepare the music. My predecessor, Basil Harwood, left me splendidly-trained choristers, very different from those I had found at Trinity College, Cambridge. The tone of these Ely boys was beautiful, and they sang like real musicians.[70]

Although, the boys may have been a positive aspect of life at Ely, a more bothersome feature was the extremely advanced age of some of the choir men. In fact, what TTN encountered was a situation that was common to many cathedral choirs. The men, or choral vicars, possessed a 'freehold' which had been established since medieval times, and which entitled them to a job for life. While this meant that the Ely men may not have been perpetual absentees (as they often were at St Paul's Cathedral in Stainer's time),[71] they were nevertheless unpensioned and relied on their income from singing as a means to live:

There were a few good voices in each division, but not enough, for many of the older men were between the ages of seventy and eighty. Fortunately after Dean Merivale passed on and Dean Stubbs came to Ely, conditions changed. I found the new Dean tremendously sympathetic and keenly interested in the music of the services. His great ambition was to have the very best that circumstances would allow. As it was necessary to have some new singers in the choir, some of the old men were pensioned. This enabled me to appoint men with much better voices; hence I was able to improve the general tone quality of the singing.[72]

The marriage of architectural beauty, tradition, personal relationships, and music were inspiring for TTN at Ely. Ely was a very small, compact community, and the cathedral was at the heart of everyday life. Even in the socially straitened times around the turn of the century, music was able to transcend one of the most fixed of all untouchables – class. It was upon this foundation that he crafted one of his most rewarding ideas: broad-based community musical events.[73] In Ely, these events took the form of two Diocesan Choral Festivals, which included over 500 participants from all the parish churches in the diocese. The hymn tunes ELY CATHEDRAL and ST AUDREY were written for these occasions.[74]

1.7 Meriel Stubbs and marriage

Subsequent to the death of Dean Merivale in 1893, the arrival of the new Dean, the much younger Dean Stubbs, brought a young and energetic family – a wife, four boys and two girls. TTN recalled:

I used to go into the Deanery for Sunday evening supper, and I got to know the family very well indeed around the dining-room table. Soon after Dean Stubbs came to Ely, I was invited to give piano lessons to his two daughters, Meriel and Edith. After these lessons, I and the girls, sometimes accompanied by Guy (brother) often went off together for long bicycle rides during which we thoroughly enjoyed ourselves. As Meriel matured into the glow of young womanhood we realized that our feeling towards each other stirred deeper currents of thought and emotion. Mrs Stubbs, also aware of this fact, did not approve of the situation at all, and did exactly what so many other mothers have done in the past, tried to separate us: she took Meriel away from Ely for a long holiday by the sea.[75]

Despite the attempts of Mrs Stubbs to separate TTN and her daughter, ten years his junior, the romance blossomed into a courtship that led to marriage. Mrs Stubbs, known for her social snobbery, felt that a musician was ultimately not suitable for her daughter. Although a very respectable position, a musician (in her opinion) would never have connections to members of royalty or the peerage that she desired for her daughter, nay, even for herself. Though she failed in her attempt for her daughter to marry into more elevated social circles, an official document revealed an attempt on behalf of the Dean to alter TTN's family background. On the marriage certificate, signed and dated 29 December 1897, in the space for the groom's father's occupation, the word Organist was written.[76] Father Noble, as stated earlier in the chapter, absconded with family money after unsuccessfully managing a jewellry business. Even though his early training included playing the organ, he was in fact, by this point in life, a thief and destined for the Workhouse. For the daughter of a dean in the Church of England to marry into a family such as the true Nobles was simply not acceptable and such gossip would have been ripe for the papers who otherwise took an active interest in the marriage as an event in the social calendar. TTN recalled how the wedding day attracted considerable attention:

> Before friends, acquaintances, and the townspeople, a congregation amounting to over two thousand people, amid the glowing architectural warmth of Ely Cathedral, the knot was tied by several clergymen, including my friend, Hugh Benson. As one newspaper put it, 'The crowd was so large and dense that it required the services of a burly police constable to enable the procession to make its way to the choir.' The full choir was in attendance with Percy Hughes, assistant organist, in charge of the music. Sir Walter Parratt had promised to play but at the last moment he was called to Osborne by royal command.
> From Punch to the London Times, there were numerous accounts of our wedding, but of all these the one appearing in the Glasgow Evening Times appealed more than any of the others:
> Ely Cathedral is an ideal building for a wedding and all the inhabitants of the little city seemed to have foregathered the other day in St Ethelreda's stately fane for the marriage of one of the Dean's daughters to Mr. T. Tertius Noble. Among the officiating clergy was a son of the late Primate, and the Bishop and all the Chapter, with Masters of Colleges at Cambridge and their womenfolk foregathered in this historic Deanery for breakfast. Among the many donors of presents was the Princess from Siam.
> The reception held at the Deanery was very democratic. My father-in-law insisted that individuals from all walks of life should be invited. In the course of events we shook hands with hundreds of people, then at the right moment slipped quietly away from those who had come to congratulate us. Shortly we left for London and then Criccieth, North Wa1es, where we had a very happy honeymoon, enjoying the beauty of that countryside, endless walks and relaxing drives in horse-drawn carriages. Too soon it was necessary to return to Ely, where there were many farewells to be said, for early in February we were destined to take up our residence in York for the fulfillment of our new duties at the Minster.[77]

Shortly after his marriage to MSN, the position of organist at York Minster became available on the retirement of John Naylor (father of E. W. Naylor). This was a more prestigious post connected to the second Archbishopric of England and offered more musical prospects than did the more remote situation at Ely. TTN applied for the post and was appointed in 1898. With his marriage and this new post, his social elevation and his musical career gained an upward trajectory.

CHAPTER TWO

From York to New York, 1898-1913

2.1 York Minster

The arrival in York for the Nobles as newlyweds was a time of great excitement and anticipation; at the age of 30, TTN had settled in a place that what was to define and mould his musical future and the musical legacy of the city. The surroundings of the north-country were new to both TTN and MSN, even though it was thought that his father, upon abandoning the family, had temporarily relocated to the Sunderland area, in County Durham.[1] For the next fifteen years, TTN would participate in over 15,000 services in the Minster as well as win the hearts and minds of the city's inhabitants through his encouraging of civic musical and cultural activities.

York had long been a centre of great industry and culture for the north of England, in addition to being the secondary seat of the Church of England. It was in 1897 that Noble applied for the post of Organist at the Cathedral and Metropolitical Church of St Peter in York: 'At the age of 30, Mr. Noble had already acquired considerable experience of organ-playing, and in the process a formidable reputation, and his application for the post – he was one of 79 applicants – had been supported by several prominent musicians, including his teachers Charles Stanford and Walter Parratt.'[2] Additionally, the Master of Trinity College, Montagu Butler (1833-1918) wrote a glowing account of TTN:

> Understanding that my friend, Mr Noble, is a Candidate for the post of Organist at York Minster, I trust that I may be permitted to say a few earnest words in his favour. During the time that he was assistant to Professor Villiers Stanford as Deputy Organist at Trinity, we all recognized with admiration his exceptionally brilliant gifts as a player and also those gifts of character which won for him the warm regard of all who knew him in College. His training of the boys of our Choir was of the best of my recollection, considered excellent, and his influence over them simple, kindly and

[1] Sunderland was part of County Durham until 1974. TTN never again associated with his father after the desertion. Father Thomas died 29 September (the Feast of Michaelmas) in 1884. He was listed as a general labourer in a Keynsham Workhouse, where he was pronounced dead at the age of 56. (Death Certificate, 29 September 1884 GB-RCM).

altogether wholesome. I cannot doubt that, even in so great a position as that of Organist of York Minster, he would be felt to be a power for good of no ordinary kind.[3]

The bustling city of York provided something of a contrast from the tiny and more isolated environs of Ely. The formal musical history of the Minster dated back to 1252 when the College of Vicars Choral was founded.[4] During the mid-eighteenth century, the Camidge family formed a long musical dynasty that would stretch for roughly one hundred years, concluding with the death of John Camidge, II in 1859.[5] Following Camidge's death at the age of sixty-nine, the gifted musician, Edwin George Monk (1819-1900), became the Organist and Choir Master.[6] Monk's background, which had been inextricably linked with the Oxford Movement and the church revival, meant that he had strong leanings toward high church practice. While Monk probably had to adapt to a more Broad Church liturgy at the Minster, his high church instincts nevertheless contributed to the richer style of cathedral worship advocated by John Jebb, instincts which are borne out by his editions of the Psalter with the Canticles and Anglican Hymn Book, both edited while in post there.[7] In 1883, Monk retired from York with a pension of £150.[8] John Naylor (1883-1897) then became Organist, whereupon his resignation and consequent death, TTN was elected for the position, following a year's vacancy.[9] TTN's early days in York were by all accounts very happy and productive:

It was my [TTN] task, besides all my duties in connection with the preparation of fourteen choral services a week at the Minster, to re-establish the Choir School and to re-build the organ with the cooperation of the Dean and Chapter; to found the York Symphony Orchestra known locally as the YSO; to train and conduct the York Musical Society, a choral organisation; to compose and conduct the music for the York Pageant of 1909; to revive, in 1910, the York Musical Festival, not held since 1828; to compose and conduct a comic opera Killibegs; and to conduct the Hovingham Festival where I had interesting associations with Joseph Joachim, the violinist and distinguished teacher.[10]

This citation from TTN's autobiography is highly significant. For one thing, he found himself in an increasingly thriving cultural centre in the north of England, though one which had, for much of the nineteenth century, lived in hoc to Leeds whose own Triennial Festival and superb choir had left York's once insuperable position as the finest choral festival in England in the shade. But with the increase in York's own surburban wealth, its own superior ecclesiastical position, and the proliferation of choral societies in Yorkshire's major industrial conurbations, there was now a perceptible momentum in both interest and ambition among York's aspiring musicians, teachers and singers; one, which TTN had the opportunity to develop and enjoy.

There were some small difficulties in setting up house when the Nobles arrived, but eventually they inhabited the organist's house at No 1 Minster Court. The first house-guests were Dean and Mrs Stubbs. TTN remarked, 'My father-in-law, who enjoyed wisely the comforts of life, was rather shocked to find there was no bathroom in our home and sought an early opportunity to tell the Dean of York what he thought about this omission. Very soon there was a meeting between the two Deans.'[11] It was likely advantageous for TTN to have a Dean (and later Bishop) in the family, for this might have given him a stronger level of credibility with the clergy of the Minster. Of course, this could have also had the opposite effect.

TTN's previous time in Ely allowed him the opportunity to focus on his own musical skills as a composer and organist. Dean Stubbs was aware of his abilities beyond the ordinary musician, and before TTN departed for York, Stubbs asked him to compose anthems based on texts he had selected. From this came six unaccompanied works, the first TTN had written, including the popular Souls of the Righteous.[12] Many of TTN's early anthems were introduced in the United States, when a former assistant organist at York (Flaxington Harker, 1876-1936) moved to Asheville, North Carolina, to become the private organist for George Vanderbilt.[13] As this anthem and other works became popular, it was realized that TTN had not issued an American copyright notice on his music, therefore a great deal of his early works were freely distributed.

TTN fortified himself for his work in York, because from quite early on he knew that changes were required, specifically he sought to: improve the choir, re-build the organ, and tame the clergy. The choir had many issues, the biggest of which was the outdated system of selecting repertoire and the old workhorse services that were mainstays in the weekly canon. For decades, the pattern of musical selection had revolved around time periods. Upon first thought, this system of organization might seem clever, but on careful inspection, the great limits and restrictions this placed on the choirmaster were frustrating. By tradition Monday through Thursday were devoted to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.[14] Friday, Saturday and Sunday were assigned to the services and anthems of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.[15] TTN felt this provided too much routine and predictability for the congregation. A service that TTN found particularly pedantic was Strogers in [12] Ibid. His more sophisticated and today, likely better known, anthem Grieve not the Holy Spirit, was not written until 1915, two years after arriving in America.

[13] The famous Biltmore House in Asheville was completed between 1889-1895 as a summer residence for the Vanderbilt family. Along with the house, there is a small village outside the entrance to the long drive, called Biltmore Village. The village church, All Souls Parish, was built by the family for their private use in 1896 and was/is affiliated with the Episcopal Church in the United States. The church's status was elevated from Parish to Cathedral in the 1980s, serving the Diocese of Western North Carolina. Mr Harker went on to live in Virginia and for a time worked for G. Schirmer Publishing.

D minor.[16] Following an argument with the Subchanter about Strogers and its place in the repertoire, TTN wrote to John Stainer seeking advice, particularly about works that he felt forced to perform.[17] Stainer responded:

3 Park Road, Oxford. 18 July 1898.

Forgive my long delay in reply to your kind note. I am very pressed with work and am not very well. I send with this a very untidy copy of a lecture I delivered here last month. It will show you how entirely our views agree about these old services. What difficult people to deal with are these 'laudatores temporis acti! Why should Strogers be a giant! or Bevin. But if my lecture does not bore you to death you will see what I say about these old 'giants.' You must go quietly until you convert people to your way of thinking. It will be a long job, because York used to pride itself on its conservation of old services. I once heard in York the morning service of Blow in something (G). I never felt so miserable in my life as when the beautiful words were being torn into shreds by wrangling voices. But your people (like all purists) are most inconsistent. I shall never forget that awful and detestable setting of the General Thanksgiving: its retention is simply a scandal! - introduced I fancy about 20 years ago. If ever you find yourself in Oxford please look us up, my wife would much like to know Mrs Noble. I too. I hope she is well. With best wishes I am yours

J. Stainer.[18]

Stainer advised TTN to slow down (until he had converted people) in his haste to excise these older services from the repertoire. Interestingly, TTN was no special admirer of Stainer's brand of 'High Victorianism', even though, as he remarked, he respected his senior position in Anglican church music: 'I [TTN] have never admired the compositions of Sir John Stainer; he was one of the recognized authorities on church music at that time. I valued his opinion, particularly as it coincided with mine.'[19]

2.2 Dean Purey-Cust

TTN had a most agreeable relationship with the Dean, Arthur Purey-Cust (1828-1916), who spent 36 years at York and is credited with cataloguing the minster heraldry.[20] TTN worked with Purey-Cust's unwavering support and he often sided with him instead of the minor canons, much to their anger and resentment. As [17] The Subchanter, William Howarth (1824-1904), was essentially the Succentor of the Minster, although this title was not in use. He took office as a minor canon in 1882 and remained in post until his death. The position of Subchanter was formally dissolved in 1934 when the college of the Vicars-Choral was formally abolished (see Listing of Clergy Notebook of York Minister, MS GB-DCYM, current as of 30 August 2014).

affable as the Dean was for TTN, the Subchanter, Canon Howarth, provided enough serious problems to outweigh the entire minster staff (!):

> One day I [TTN] was told rather roughly by the Sub-Chanter that he had the power to force me to carry out his instructions, and prepare for performance the music he had chosen. I continually refused to obey his orders, and deliberately changed the music as I saw fit. Apparently all out war was on, nor had I any intention of letting the Sub-Chanter and his followers conquer me. After this had gone on for some time, the Dean and Chapter who were on my side called a meeting of the canons, sub-chanter and minor canons in order to bring about peace. At this meeting the Dean who knew the ancient laws of the Minster in connection with the duties of the minor canons informed them that if they persisted upon forcing me to prepare music that with my training I thought unworthy of the services, that he would insist that two of these laws be re-established. The first commanded a minor canon to say Matins each morning at 6.00; the second, that a minor canon must be within the cathedral close every night at 9.00. Also, he informed the assembled clergy that from that time onward he would insist that every Monday morning that I take the service list to him for his signature. This I was glad to do, for the Dean never interfered in any way with the music chosen, but always gave me permission to change anything on the list about which I did not approve. During the rest of my stay at York, I had no more trouble about the choice of music.[21]

2.3 E. G. Monk, the choir school and repertoire

When TTN arrived in 1898, there was no choir school for the boys. The school was disbanded with Dr Monk's resignation in 1883, at which time the boys were educated at Archbishop Holgate's School.[22] It was not until 1903 that the choir school was re-formed.[23] TTN was a firm believer in this form of disciplined training (in New York, he would encounter a similar situation). Having total and unrestricted access to the boy choristers was crucial to the success of their training. When boys attended a school with no direct affiliation to the church, the church remained powerless over rehearsal times and performance schedules. City schools and teachers were largely ignorant of (and resistant to) the requirements exacted by cathedral worship and the life of choristers, hence it was desirable to have a choir school which complied with the cathedral timetable.

[21] TTN Memoirs, ch. 6, pp. 4-5.
[22] The school was founded as Archbishop Holgate's Grammar School in 1546 by Robert Holgate, the then Archbishop of York.
[23] 'In 1903 Dean Purey-Cust with Canon Watson and Canon Argyles made arrangements for a building in Minster Yard which had fallen vacant to be used as the new song school. It was a long two storey building and on the first floor to the right was a practice room with the large classroom below and to one side which could be divided into two by a partition when needed. The new headmaster…was George Scaife. The school settled down happily under him…Dean Purey-Cust, when he visted the school in 1903 was more than pleased with the way it was being run.' (see http://www.ofchoristers.net/Chapters/York.htm, accessed 21 September 2014).

When the York Choir School was re-formed, TTN secured a building across the street from the Minster; then he sought what he felt was most important to the school's success - a headmaster that he would select, personally. The process of shortlisting suitable candidates was very brief, for in the city, a former pupil of his was working as master in one of York's schools – George A. Scaife.[24] Scaife was the perfect choice because of his love and understanding of music. TTN wanted someone that would look after the academic side of things, but also nurture and encourage the young musicians in his care. The relationship between the organist and headmaster was as important as priest and musician, for if one was working against the other, in the end, the ones to suffer were the boys. As TTN remembered:

> Mr Scaife held this position for forty-eight years, retiring in 1951 owing to poor health. Upon his retirement the Dean and Chapter assigned a stall to him in York Minster with the title, 'Magister Emeritus Scholarum De Cantu'. I doubt whether there was a finer school of its type in England during the years that Mr Scaife was in charge.[25]

The repertoire at the Minster, as TTN earlier remarked, was somewhat limited and unchanging in its construction. There remained (from Monk's time) a strong focus on liturgical feast observations, contained within the daily choral services of morning and evening prayer.[26] Many of the anthems were drawn from the rich oratorio tradition, including soprano solo movements sung by the boys' voices in unison (a practice TTN later introduced at STC).[27] Music from earlier periods (of which TTN was not particularly fond) was also quite popular, including works by

Palestrina, Byrd, Tye, Farrant and Gibbons.[28] All of these composers were from sixteenth-century England, with the exception of Palestrina whose inclusion signalled a tentative if significant interest in the revival of his music during the nineteenth century. It would, however, almost certainly have been sung in English.[29]

As part of a right-of-centre liturgical pattern, the Minster services of evensong included the singing or the recitation of the Angelus.[30] This was highly unusual and not part of TTN's experiences in Cambridge or Ely. Plainsong psalms (which would have certainly been favoured by Monk with his Ecclesiological background) during the seasons of Advent and Lent were also commonplace at York. It is unclear if the psalms were chanted by the men only or if the boys took turn in alternating verses or unison singing. As late as 1913, there was no service for only men's voices, which had been increasing in popularity during the late nineteenth century.

TTN initiated several musical traditions at York that would ultimately follow him to NYC: the singing of Handel's Messiah during Advent and Lent, and the annual Advent presentation of Louis Spohr's oratorio The Last Judgment. Spohr's oratorio had remained a favourite of English choral festivals, coming close behind those of Handel, Mendelssohn and Haydn's The Creation and many of its choruses were used as anthems for cathedral worship. Stainer, after his arrival at St Paul's in 1872, established the liturgical singing of The Last Judgment as a fixture of the cathedral's musical calendar. (It was also recognised, especially the overture, as a tour de force on the organ.) Spohr's work, which was sung at the Minster from 1898, followed the St Paul's tradition, marking a penitential disposition during the season

[29] The most commonly sung Palestrina motet was 'Break forth into Joy.' This was a five part anthem with an adapted text to fit with the Anglican services during the season of Epiphany. (see Clara Marvin, Giovanni Pierluigi Da Palestrina: A Guide to Research, New York: Routledge Publishing, 2002, p. 214). Titles were also recorded in English in the Minster music lists (MS GB-DCYM).

preceding Christmas. (The observation of Advent (at least in America) has been a long-fought liturgical battle, drawing its ammunition from the 1662 BCP, and subsequently the 1928 and 1979 American BCPs.)

Many new anthems and canticle settings were also introduced by TTN between 1898 and 1913. One of the most enduring and strikingly different from other Victorian service settings in use was Stanford's Evening Service in G, Op. 81. The first performance in York took place in January of 1908, six years after Stanford completed the morning and evening settings:[31]

> In October 1902…Stanford had completed his Morning, Communion and Evening Service in G, Op 81, his fourth major setting. Dedicated to another of his RCM colleagues, Sir George C Martin, organist of St Paul's Cathedral, the Service in G looks back to the symphonic and cyclic paradigm of the Service in B flat, Op 10, though Stanford's structural approach here is broader and tonally more wide-ranging than in its predecessor. The entire Service contains much fine music, but it is the Evening Canticles that have enjoyed enduring approbation, owing principally to the lyrical exuberance of the soloistic writing. In fact, beyond the seamless developmental process so characteristic of Stanford's mature church music, it is the adoption of a lieder-orientated style—to match the 'songs' of Mary and Simeon—that is the miracle of these two enchanting movements.[32]

Stanford's pioneering B flat service was also of importance to TTN – the morning and evening canticles were a fixed staple of Christmas Day in York (and also in NYC). For TTN, Stanford's works represented a forward-looking idiom in cathedral music (particularly with the purging of services such as Strogers), as had been the case for Stanford with continental polyphonic music:

> The Service in B flat, Op 10, marked a major step forward in Stanford's setting of the morning and evening canticles. As a composer he had fully assimilated the symphonic intellectualism of Brahms as evidenced by his first Symphony (1876), the Cello Sonata, Op 9 (1877), the Violin Sonata, Op 11 (1877), and the Piano Quartet, Op 15 (1879), and looked to adapt this compositional approach to the setting of familiar canticle texts and the ordinary of the communion service. In bringing an instrumental orientation to the music of the Anglican liturgy, Stanford challenged the accepted norm of 'choral' primacy where emphasis on the words, the clarity of their delivery, meaning and, most of all, their comprehension was paramount. This is not to say that Stanford (any more than his hero Brahms) ignored the textual dimension—far from it—but other issues, such as the sense of musical and structural cohesion came to warrant equal consideration. To add weight to this change of emphasis, the organ was emancipated from its customary accompanimental role and, building on the example of Walmisley's Evening Service in D minor, assumed instead one of quasi-orchestral character. This not only suited Stanford's own colourful style of organ-playing inherited from Stewart, but also exploited the resources of the new instrument at Trinity. A further feature of the Service in B flat is the parallel drawn between the various canticles and conventional symphonic movement style-forms…the Magnificat, a Scherzo (a ternary structure in which the Gloria functions as a recapitulation) and the Nunc dimittis, a slow movement. Other unifying elements include the repetition of the Gloria (in the Benedictus, Jubilate Deo and Nunc dimittis), the cyclic reference to common material and specific tonalities (notably D flat and C major) shared among the individual movements, and, special to the Service in B flat, the prevalence of Gregorian material (for example, the intonation to the Te Deum and the 'Dresden Amen' used in the Gloria).[33]

TTN (like Stanford) held a great affection for the music of Brahms and specifically, Ein Deutsches Requiem, as was evidenced by its frequency of performance in York; TTN often performed this work as an extended anthem during evensong in a similar manner to that of The Last Judgment.[34] Considering the substantial length of the Requiem, and with the inclusion of the normal canticles, psalmody and liturgy contained within the office, this was an extraordinary notion. His first professional association with the work occurred in Cambridge (under Stanford) and throughout his entire career in Britain and America, the Requiem was a fixture on his music lists.

TTN's own fame as a composer was growing, particularly after the noted success of his B minor canticles published in the last decade of the nineteenth century. However, there is a conspicuous lack of his own music (a substantial quantity of which was written during the York years) in the music lists. The first performance of 'Souls of the Righteous' was on 24 November 1900; the text having been compiled by his father-in-law during his time in Ely.[35] TTN was obliged to perform anthems, chants and canticles of his predecessors in post, in fact, more so than his own compositions. Perhaps this was a compromise on his behalf to maintain the contentment of Howarth (Subchanter) and to avoid placing the Dean in any needlessly embarrassing position. It must be noted that following the death of Howarth in 1904, the amount of TTN's music did increase in frequency.

An event, of a more personal nature, that graced the year 1903 was the birth of TTN's son and only child, Philip.[36] He remarked on the happy day:

> Sir Walter Parratt was one of the first to send a card of congratulation to the parents, and on this communication he wrote the first theme of Handel's chorus: 'For unto us a child is born, a son is given,' in red ink. On that day I was very busy with my services in the Minster, but like most men under similar circumstances rather excited. During an Ordination Service at which Archbishop Maclagan was officiating I cut His Grace out of an important prayer playing out the congregation ahead of time. After the service the Archbishop was about to send for me to issue a reprimand, but when he heard what was happening at my home sent instead congratulations. Even though Dr. Jalland, the doctor in charge apparently inhaled too much chloroform meant for my wife and went to sleep, he fortunately woke up in time to encourage a safe delivery.[37]

At York everyday life was filled with the busy routine that was associated with being an English cathedral organist. As TTN remarked in some detail in his autobiography, the timetable was an exacting one:

> …the life of a choirboy was a very busy one. It began at 8.45 am when we [TTN and boys] had a rehearsal which lasted till 9.45. Immediately after this the boys went over to the Minster for choral Matins, which usually lasted till about 10.50. At the end of Matins the Dean who rarely missed this service wou1d remain fully robed in the south choir aisle and gather around him the twenty choristers for what was meant to be a short talk on the scriptures, but sometimes these talks were on the long side. Mr Scaife was always present, ready when the Dean had finished to take the youngsters across the street to the Choir School. As soon after eleven as possible, they began their lessons which lasted until 12.30. Then the boys went home for lunch. At two o'clock they were back at school for the afternoon session, which lasted until 3.45. At 4.00 they had to sing Evensong. This service was generally over about 4.50, unless there had been a very long anthem, and some of the anthems were long, lasting over eighteen minutes. After Evensong the boys went back to school to collect their books for homework. In spite of the fact that these little fellows had less time for their lessons than the boys in other schools, they not only held their own in examinations as I have already proved, but in most cases were far ahead of the average boy. It has been my experience that musical boys are on the whole intelligent.[38]

2.4 Minster organ

In addition to a highly trained choir, the aid of a fine pipe organ was crucial for total success of a cathedral music programme; the organ has long been associated with the upholding of the Anglican choral tradition. Unlike its Roman counterpart - filled with beautiful polyphony in an a cappella style, the Anglican tradition's repertoire is based more on an accompanied style of music. This is borne out from examples as early as the late Renaissance, in verse anthems and service music by Byrd, Gibbons, Morley and others. The first record of an organ in York Minster dates from the 1600s when James Hutchinson was organist.[39] When TTN arrived in 1898, the instrument he encountered had been built by the firm of Elliot and Hill in 1832 during Camidge's time, and replaced the former organ [maker unknown] that was destroyed by the fire of 1829.[40] This particular fire (one of several in the Minster's history) was the responsibility of the arsonist, Jonathan Martin. The story was that Mr Martin, a non-conformist, had attended an evening service at the Minster and was upset by a noise coming from the organ. He hid himself in the tower and during the night, came down and set a large blaze in the quire. The fire burned most of the night before being noticed in the morning light. By this point, a great deal of the quire and organ had been damaged, including the organ case.[41] The firm of William Hill and Sons was engaged in 1859 to rebuild the now severely damaged instrument of 1832. The entire organ was mechanically new and kept some of the larger pipes from the Elliot and Hill instrument.[42] When TTN arrived in 1898, he found the organ to be in poor shape, particularly mechanically (!). At this point in time, organ building and organ technology were rapidly changing, so the lifespan of items of a mechanical nature was short lived. In addition to the physical problems with the instrument, TTN found it to be lacking tonally. There were excess stops that were not of particular use; namely the sackbut, found in the pedal organ. 'This perfectly appalling stop was only used with the full organ, except when I found it useful for other purposes!' TTN remarked.[43] There were also serious issues with winding for the bellows. TTN felt very impatient and frustrated that everything was not as he wanted. On certain occasions (particularly important ones), he would play the organ in such a way as to expose its underbelly and its immediate weaknesses.[44]

'This sort of thing went on for some time. However, about four years after my [TTN] appointment, the Dean suddenly said one morning, 'Noble, something must be done about this organ: it makes such queer noises.' I heartily agreed, but as there was no fund to rebuild the instrument, and as the Dean and Chapter took no initiative to raise the money, no progress was made other than the fact that Willis, the organ builder, commonly known as 'Father Willis', was invited to come to York to inspect the instrument. This he did, condemning it, and offering to build an entirely new organ for the sum of five thousand pounds, a sum which the Dean and Chapter turned down. This was a wise action for there were many stops in the Hill organ which was built in 1832: this organ had the first metal 32 ft. placed in any cathedral organ. This stop is still useful and stands in the south choir aisle.'[45]

In time, and following a cleverly organised visit from Parratt to play a recital, it was decided that TTN would set out to raise the money for a new organ, through the help and assistance of the ladies' leagues in York, chaired by Miss Mary Eagerton.[46] The work was done by J. W. Walker & Sons of London, producing a most successful instrument, fit for recitals played by England's leading organists:[47]

I [TTN] must tell an amusing story in connection with Sir Walter's recital. Thomas Simpson Camidge, father of John Camidge of Beverley Minster, was still a very vigorous old gentleman, well over eighty, and he was naturally most anxious to meet the real Sir Walter. This I arranged before the recitalist went up into the organ-loft. Parratt's hair was never very tidy, and, when excited, as he usually was after playing, he had the habit of putting his hands through his hair until it stood on end. When Parratt came down from the loft, Camidge was there, beaming with smiles, to greet and congratulate him, then seeing his hair literally standing on end, he burst out: 'Why, Sir Walter, you went up a Parratt, but you have come down a cockatoo.'[48]

2.5 York Symphony Orchestra

One of TTN's most unique and rewarding experiences in York was working with local orchestral musicians. He had little in the way of formal orchestral training, although he did play the violin at the RCM as a second study. It would be a fair assumption to say that his skills at the organ and composition were keener than that of the violin. His violin professor, in the student reports from 1885 wrote the [44] Ibid.

[46] TTN intentionally brought Parratt to play, knowing he would condemn the instrument publically and garner the attention of the Dean and Chapter. TTN, likewise assisted in the raising of funds through organ recitals: 'Organist Recital by TTN in aid of the organ fund, Thursday alternating between 2.30 p.m., 8 p.m.' (August 1900, Music Lists, MS GB-DCYM).

comment 'made a fair start' in regard to TTN's progress.[49] Nevertheless, in spite of his modest abilities as a string player, TTN saw the effort of a local orchestra as a way of bringing the community together through a common experience and also, to inspire a love of music and general musical education. What is more, the training he had received as a musician, by way of the College of Organists, presupposed that he would possess some fundamental knowledge of the orchestra and orchestration, even if conducting technique was still something that was not formally taught in musical conservatoires, and such training invested the organist, and the cathedral organist especially, with a special status of [local] authority. When he arrived in York, there was a small group of musicians which formed the York Musical Society.[50] Until this point, York was primarily known for its amateur vocal music while instrumental music was reserved for dance bands and visiting soloists.[51] York was not alone in this situation, as one journalist remarked: 'it cannot… in truth be said that York is conspicuously behind other and far larger towns in its comparative neglect of orchestral music, which has long been the Cinderella of musical England.'[52]

TTN recognized this as a golden opportunity for change. During the major enhancement in standards in England during the 1880s (often dubbed the English Musical Renaissance), a need and interest in the formation of many professional and local orchestras was ignited. This musical movement, forged primarily by professors at the RCM, sought to bring about a national voice in British music, which, though it did not neglect important continental influences, sought to pursue a more national path. In this way, a greater musical awareness amongst the public grew in which music, once seen as a popular pastime, was now recognised as a major cultural feature of society in general. In this way, choral societies flourished as well as public musical education, and York's musical activities were part of that cultural amelioration.

TTN's counterpart in his symphonic endeavour was the energetic and talented Editha Knocker, a pupil of the famed violinist Joseph Joachim.[53] Knocker, born in 1869 in Edgeworth, was highly regarded in musical circles.[54] In addition to her study with the famous Hungarian violinist, she also translated Leopold Mozart's book A Treatise on the Fundamental Principles of Violin Playing, first published by Oxford in 1948. TTN already knew Joachim from his time in Cambridge and his association with CUMS and Stanford.[55] Knocker had a large private studio of string players, and along with other musical families in the city, the forming of a proper symphony orchestra was enthusiastically welcomed. TTN recalled:

> I was amazed to find a keen interest that manifested itself in our project, and the number of players in our community. There was one musical family by the name of Groves: it provided two violins, one viola, and two cellos. To begin with, I had only one double bass, a most erratic performer who hit more wrong than right notes. However, his spirit was magnificent, and when you are building an orchestra from a group of interested amateurs, courage on the part of the players is one of the essential ingredients in order to gain success. I had a few promising woodwind players, but one could not call them good. An enthusiastic lady, Miss Lucy Mundy, took up the bassoon. At the beginning, she was none too safe, but in the course of a year or so she had progressed sufficiently to play the second bassoon part. Another of our group was Caroline Bigge, a sister of Lord Stanfordham, private secretary to Queen Victoria: she was an excellent musician and played the piano very well. Wanting to get into our orchestra, she took up the kettle drums, and became efficient in this capacity. We all persisted, practicing every week, enjoying our musical struggles and getting a lot of wholesome fun out of them. With continued hard work the standard of performance grew better.[56]

The York Symphony Orchestra's first concert was held in April of 1899 and featured primarily Haydn symphonies. The orchestra also highlighted woodwind and brass players from a popular military band, based in York.[57] The concert was a huge success and was met with much encouragement to continue. After the orchestra gained experience and musical solidity, TTN began to invite guest conductors to take part in concerts. 'Among these were Edward German and Coleridge-Taylor. On these occasions I [TTN] would take my place with the other members of the orchestra struggling with the 'kitchen furniture,' an occupation I found far more nerve racking than conducting.'[58]

During Coleridge-Taylor's stay an amusing incident occurred. One afternoon at teatime, our very young son, Philip, had been invited to come in to the drawing room to meet the composer-conductor. Upon entering, he rushed right up to Coleridge-Taylor, took his hand, then looked at his mother with wide open amazed blue eyes and exclaimed, 'Oh, Mummy, where did you get this lovely live golliwog,' a golliwog being a black doll very much in vogue at that time. This would have been an awkward moment for us if Coleridge-Taylor hadn't dismissed the matter with a hearty laugh, for like so many of his race he had a natural courtesy.

The following morning in an interview with the press Coleridge-Taylor remarked that the York Symphony Orchestra was in his opinion the finest amateur orchestra in England. This praise coming from a man of his type was most encouraging.[59]

The overwhelming success of the YSO was inspiring for TTN. He knew very well how to train a choir and play the organ, but mastering music-making on a much larger scale, and without professional musicians, was extraordinary and, moreover, created a strong sympathetic bond with the people of York. TTN possessed a gift that was unusual (as Stanford wrote in his recommendation), which set him apart from other cathedral organists; he had what one might describe as a je ne sais quoi to inspire humanity. The intrinsic and extrinsic energy that he ignited in hundreds of musicians in York made room in not only the lives of the people, but also in their personal memories. He was able to teach them how to produce music on a level far outside their own capabilities. This attests to his skills as a teacher, and moreover, as a human being; added to which, the bonds created in the YSO strengthened the culture of the city. TTN changed the musical history of the community, and at the end of the day, he was remembered more as a dear friend than the remote figure on the podium.

2.6 York Musical Society

Another community venture that TTN took on shortly after arriving in York was the York Musical Society. Eventually, he combined the forces of the YSO and YMS and produced many fine programmes featuring choir and orchestra together. He found this very fulfilling and composed many works for this combined group. The Gloria Domini of 1904, used a libretto written by his father-in-law.[60] He also included Handel's Messiah in these concerts of which he created an edition published by G. Schirmer in 1912, which is still used by many choirs as an authoritative edition, notwithstanding the existence of more modern editions (such as by Watkins Shaw, ed. or pub. Bärenreiter). Highlights from the YSO and YMS from 1901 - 1913 reveal a wide variety of repertoire across the spectra of opera, oratorio, cantata and orchestral works: Gounod's The Redemption; Wagner's Siegfried Idyll; Parry's soliloquy Saul's Dream; an operatic scene from Oberon "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster" by Weber; Brahms's German Requiem and Song of Destiny; Mozart's Requiem; Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha's Wedding Feast and The Death of Minnehaha; Sullivan's The Golden Legend; Elgar's Scenes from King Olaf (conducted by the composer) and The Dream of Gerontius; Verdi's Requiem; Dvořák's Stabat Mater and Berlioz's Faust.[61] This daunting list of repertoire is not only a testament to TTN's ability as a well-rounded musician, but the forces of chorus and orchestra he commanded (not to mention the technical difficulty); and from all indications, the performances were of a high quality and well received by critics and audiences alike. A concert of particular note took place

[60] This work was performed in NYC at St. Paul's Chapel in 1911: 'My [TTN] first professional contact with the New World was with Edmund Jacques, who as a boy had been in the choir at York Minster when Dr. E.G. Monk was in charge of the music. Edmund Jacques was connected with Trinity Parish in New York City, as organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Chapel, and in that place of worship he performed on 25 January 1911 for the first time in the United States my sacred cantata Gloria Domini…When I settled in the United States, Jacques and I became staunch friends, and are so today. By those who know him well, he is much beloved for his warm-hearted personality and his sterling qualities as a church musician.' (TTN Memoirs, ch. 6, p. 20).

on 7 April 1908: Edwar Elgar's The Dream of Gerontius. This concert was programmed during Lent, and on the same day that H. H. Asquith was invited to become Prime Minster. Elgar was not in attendance due to a trip to Rome, but he wrote to TTN two days after the successful performance, sending his best wishes.[62] The performance was held in the Exhibition Buildings and featured a chorus of over two hundred singers. The principal roles were sung by well-established soloists - Molly Deane (Angel), Gervase Elwes (Gerontius) and Francis Harford (Priest and Angel of Agony). Elwes was considered the greatest champion of the role of Gerontius, (completing over one hundred and eighteen performances) and was known for his strong Roman Catholic convictions which, it was widely considered, made his singing genuine and appealing.[63]

Elgar later visited York during 1910, when TTN revived the once famed York Festival. The Festival, originally founded in 1791 by John Camidge (1735-1803) had not been held in York for nearly three-quarters of a century, until, due to the ambition of TTN and the support of the city, it was revived.[64] TTN immediately engaged his friend, Elgar (1857-1934), who was at the peak of his career, and Granville Bantock (1868-1946), an orchestral conductor and composer who had cut his teeth directing new British music on the podium at New Brighton, to be guest conductors. They conducted some of their own works, with TTN being billed as the principal conductor of the seventy-six person orchestra and four-hundred-member chorus(!):[65]

> The concerts took place on 20-21 July. On Wednesday afternoon the programme consisted of Sir Edward Elgar's Cockaigne overture, the Enigma Variations, one of the great orchestral scores of the twentieth century, songs for Sea Pictures, and his Wand of youth, (No. 2), Mozart's pianoforte concerto in G major (K. 435) and Bach's concerto for strings. In the evening we presented Mendelssohn's Elijah. On Thursday morning we played Beethoven's Leonore (No. 3) Overture, Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony in B minor, Wagner's Tannhauser overture and Schumann's A minor piano concerto, and the afternoon of the same day Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 5 in E minor. That evening we performed Elgar's King Olaf, Bantock's Suite for orchestra, which consisted of four dramatic dances and the festival ended with a selection of my pageant music played by request. Sitting in the audience as Elgar conducted his King Olaf, I felt happy about the work of the chorus and not without reason for in connection with their singing came the following letter from Elgar:[66]

27 July 1910. Plas Gwyn, Hereford.

My dear Noble:- I have been overwhelmed with proofs since I returned home. Thank you a thousand times for the delightful time we had in York and please thank your superb chorus for their singing. King Olaf was the finest performance I have yet heard and it would take superhuman voices to surpass it. I know how lovingly and artistically you have laboured for the festival and I thank you and congratulate you on your complete success. I trust your executives are pleased and will be encouraged to persevere. Whatever weakness appeared in the festival was due to its youth and not old age or what is worse, ineptitude. Kindest regards to Mrs Noble and you, believe me

Yours very sincerely,

Edward Elgar

2.7 York Pageant and Empire Festival Day

A year before the York Festival revival, TTN organized and composed music for a York Pageant. This was done in conjunction with Stanford's successor at Trinity, Alan Gray (1855-1935), who also wrote some of the scenes.[67] 'During the early part of the twentieth century, England had a number of historical pageants, held at Sherborne, Warwick, Bury St Edmund's, Dover and Colchester. As these community dramas based on local history had proved extremely popular, sooner or later York, rich in history, was destined to have her pageant, and, during the summer of 1909 this took place.'[68] The Pageant opened on 26 July 1909 and ran until the 31 July. The pageant master was Louis N. Parker, who led the cast of thousands in the telling of York's history, including the association with many famous religious figures of Northeast England, such as Cuthbert and Bede.[69] The musical work of TTN combined with the lyrics of James Rhoades, an English poet of the time, was met with outstanding success. The pageant collected over fourteen thousand pounds, covering all expenses and providing extra funds that were donated to local charities.[70] Once again, TTN championed another genre of music and showed the city his ability and skill as a multi-genre composer and an artistic collaborator. Following his noted success in these large-scale orchestral and community events, word reached the London musical scene of the great happenings in the north.

In October of 1911, TTN was invited, as part of the nationwide Empire Day Festival, to travel to London and conduct a choir made-up of two thousand singers, all from Yorkshire. The concert took place at 4.30 p.m. and was accompanied at the organ by TTN's successor at the Minster, Edward Cuthbert Bairstow (1874-1946).[71] TTN recalled the thrill of the event, for when he walked onto the stage of the Crystal Palace to conduct the massed choir, it was not until that moment that the singers and TTN had ever laid eyes on each other. He remembered this as one of the most thrilling moments of his entire musical career.[72]

2.8 William C. Macfarlane and departure for New York

As word of TTN's success in York and surrounding areas spread quickly, and with the aid of his aspiring career as a composer, his name was known not only at home but as far away as the United States and Canada. He often received visitors from around the world, and, during the summer of 1912, he experienced a most interesting encounter with an American musician on holiday - William C. Macfarlane. WM was very interested in TTN's work with the choir and his musicianship at the organ during the services. The two men formed an acquaintance that ultimately paved an avenue for TTN to be offered the position in NYC at St Thomas Church.[73] In early 1913, while TTN was in the USA on a recital tour, he met with the music committee of STC to discuss the possibility of his moving to America to take up the post. After much deliberation and angst, he decided in January of 1913, to accept the post and move his family to the new world. He was scheduled to be in the USA for nearly two and one-half months (until early March), so the news of his acceptance was sent directly to York by cable. The reality of this appointment sent shock waves through the musical community and the larger population of York. The man whom they had known and trusted as their musician for fifteen years had decided to leave England, but moreover, he had decided to leave their community and their lives. TTN's relationships in York were deep-rooted and went well beyond the surface level of a conductor and his musicians. As Stanford said of TTN in his recommendation letter for the Ely post, he had 'the rare gift of inspiring his forces with enthusiasm and making himself thoroughly popular with them'[74]

The reactions of his imminent departure ranged from anger to muted happiness for his success. The news was delivered to the Dean, who was categorically against TTN ever considering the position. On the contrary, the Archbishop of York, Cosmo Lang (1864-1945), encouraged TTN to accept, and served as a voice of reason, giving him the support he sought fully to consider the options before him.[75] It was the archbishop, upon knowing that TTN's leaving was a reality, convened the community of York to express their thanks and grief and, in turn, to plan a celebration for this extraordinary man's work in their community. It was agreed upon at STC that TTN would only return to England for a brief period (following his recital tour), officially to resign and prepare to move to America. The archbishop's meeting was prompted by the reaction to this news - time was nigh, and a proper and enthusiastic response was required.

On 21 February, in Maclagan Memorial Hall, St Williams' College, (and in TTN's absence) Cosmo Lang chaired one of the most important meetings of a musical and religious community in Yorkshire history. The meeting was brought to order:

> I have been asked, ladies, and gentlemen, to take the chair on this occasion, and I do so with very great willingness. We all know now that when Mr. Tertius Noble returns [from America], it will only be to take his farewell of the place where he has worked with such faithfulness and with such distinction for so many years. It is now sixteen years [sic] he has taken, as you know better than I do even, a leading part in the life of the church and of the city and neighbourhood of York…I have felt that he always had the highest ideal in his own mind, and that in his training of the choir and in the rendering of the services, he showed both his musical power and spirit of devotion and worship.[76]

Lang was very much involved in the musical life of the minster; he attended concerts and community events, in addition to the occasional evensong, when his busy schedule allowed; he possessed a deep appreciation for TTN's musical abilities, but moreover, he showed great respect for TTN's active life in the entire community of York, particularly his involvement with the YSO. Lang continued:

> He [TTN] took a very real and distinctive place in the musical life of the city and of the whole neighbourhood…Mr. Noble has been for all these years the director of music here in York, and I must not forget, what none of you probably will ever forget, the service he has rendered in his own orchestra and in the choral society here in York. A director of music is a great public benefactor. It is a great thing for any city to have in its midst any one who by his knowledge and his acts is genuinely trying to uplift the ideals of the people. Of course, in the Minster, in the Cathedral and in the great churches he has had the greatest chance of linking music to worship, but even on a much wider scale, a director of music has an immense opportunity of raising the whole tone of the artistic life of the community among which he dwells.[77]

Lang also recognized TTN's ability to inspire the average (even uneducated) person and to encourage in them a will beyond their modest capabilities. Many clergy, namely the minor canons of the Minster, were threatened by such a charismatic personality, but the wiser and mature dean and archbishop saw TTN's abilities as equal to their own.[78] These gifts are what made TTN so readily suited for the new post in New York. The church sought a man of remarkable talent for creating the extraordinary from the ordinary. STC also viewed itself as more of a cathedral than parish church; thus TTN's experience increased his magnetism. The earlier discussion of his community initiatives and involvement paints a clearer picture as to why so many were distressed at the thought of his leaving, and more practically, the daunting task of securing a suitable replacement. In a lifetime, an encounter with a person of such a unique nature as TTN can occur. But, it must be understood that the likelihood of an equal replacement is rather unlikely. The Dean of York, for instance, did not see fit for TTN to depart for the new world, for he had become very dependent upon him. Fortunately, Lang's sobering statement of support bolstered the Dean:

> Mr. Noble has now chosen to leave us, and I know that it has caused great sorrow to many of us, and not least our beloved Dean, whom publicly and with all my heart I congratulate to-day on being here with us. 85 in years, and any age you like in character - except an old age. I know that the Dean is very sorry that Mr. Noble should have left…[but] I have heard from him [TTN] telling me of the good promise that he thinks awaits him in his new life in the United States. He has told me of the organ which is to be built for him to be ready next October, and of the choir school in which it is hoped he may have a chance of training the choir of New York to carry on the traditions of our old choir at home. And he has sent me a photograph of the splendid church of St. Thomas's; and although no one would claim that St. Thomas's of New York could rival the Minster of old York, it is still going to be a singularly noble building, showing not only a spirit of genius, but of reverence in the mind of the architect- and I think that Mr. Noble will have a great sphere in the life of the United States in taking there all the ability and enthusiasm that he commands- into the centre of that great city some of those high and true traditions of English music which he has so long represented here.[79]

Rumors of the offer from NYC began to spread in late September and early October of 1912, so the reality of TTN accepting the position was not a complete surprise. Even the worldwide news organizations took interest in TTN's looming prospects. The New York Times, in a 1912 Christmas Eve article stated 'Mr. Noble says he has practically decided to accept the appointment. He feels that it will afford him great scope for the development of cathedral music in America.'[80]

In his speech, it seems quite poignant that the Archbishop spoke so forwardly and intimately of behalf of the Dean's feeling for TTN. However, this situation was of such an extraordinary nature that personal social protocol was placed aside and the heart was allowed to speak. After the Archbishop concluded, the dean put forth a resolution:

[80] New York Times, 24 December 1912.

The resolution that I have to propose is this: 'That a public testimonial be presented to Mr. T. T. Noble on his leaving York for America, in recognition for his great services to music during his fifteen year's residence in the city.' A great deal is comprehended in that resolution, and many of us, if we had time, could discourse upon it for a considerable period; but as our proceedings this afternoon must necessarily be short, it is only necessary to concentrate upon one of two points, and there are two things which are mentioned here which I think deserve our recognition in connection with Mr. Noble. The first is recognition of his great service to music in its comprehensive state- not music entirely in one particular school of another particular school, but everything which really deserves the name of music. There have been, you know, great organists who have taken a very one-sided view of what music is, and have looked with contempt upon what other people value… I must say of Mr. Noble that he took a very large and comprehensive view of music, but I am sure he had his own particular preferences, and I know very well what it was that he particularly liked, but he never asserted that to the exclusion of music in general.[81]

The Dean went on to elaborate how musicians often are unreasonable and highly exclusive in their musical choices, but TTN genuinely loved all music in the appropriate place and time. This speaks highly of TTN's character and passion for musical educational to persons of all backgrounds and influences.

He [TTN] has done a very great work here, and we acknowledge it and appreciate it cordially. He goes away with our cordial good wishes. Our "God bless him" will follow him in what he has undertaken, at the same time, while realizing the great loss to ourselves, we all feel anxious to do something which shall be with him an abiding token of appreciation of his services and our best wishes for his happiness.[82]

Following the remarks of Lang and the Dean, members of the community were allowed to add their voices of congratulation and regret. Sir William Worsley, an important figure in Yorkshire who resided in Hovingham, spoke of TTN's devotion to the larger neighbourhood and specifically for his work with the Hovingham Music Festival. Worsley spoke of TTN's influence outside of York, particularly in regard for his willingness to conduct the 1906 music festival in Hovingham; this he did without accepting remuneration. The following is an article taken from the Musical Times describing this unique event in northeast England:

The Hovingham Festival is an absolutely unique phenomenon in the world of music. Its story has been told before now in The Musical Times so all that need be said to explain how this little village in one of the most purely rural parts of Yorkshire is entitled to boast of a festival at which a long series of important works has been given is that a good many years back when Canon Pemberton was rector of the adjoining parish of Gilling he was impressed by the possibilities of a hall or Riding school attached to Sir William Worsley's residence at Hovingham as a concert room, conceived the idea of a festival and carried it into effect. When he left the neighbourhood there came a break in the continuity of the festivals which had been held not annually but in about two out of every three years and then the recent death of Mr John Rutson who had generously subsidized the institution when it most needed such help came as an additional blow. However Sir William Worsley who has not merely provided the concert room but has taken a deep personal interest in the festivals was determined that they should not come to a premature end. The good will of Canon Pemberton was assured and his active assistance was promised while a most capable and energetic successor as conductor was found in Mr T. Tertius Noble the organist of York Minster…Throughout the festival indeed Mr Noble proved his fitness for the task he had undertaken and with further experience of what it involves he should go still farther adding to the vitality of his readings an increased dignity and repose. [83]

In gratitude for TTN rescuing this beloved gem in the musical life of Yorkshire and the country, Worsley added:

Wherever he was asked to do so - wherever he found a desire to promote good music- you might depend upon it that Mr. Noble would be very willing to give one his help; and what help it was - how stimulating and how energetic. He is going to leave us; he is going where so many of our best objects of art go. Many of them are inanimate; they have no memory; but Mr. Noble has memory, and I hope and believe that when he is out there his memory will often be back with us in York and this part of Yorkshire. We shall certainly always remember him, and I hope that he will not merely remember us, but that we shall at no infrequent intervals see him in this ancient city where all feel his loss very deeply, and we hope that the outcome of this meeting will be some worthy memorial which may keep, if that is necessary, our memory fresh with him.[84]

K. E. T. Wilkinson of the YSO spoke of TTN's contributions to the city and specifically to the symphonic community. As a founding member of YSO, Wilkinson remarked of TTN's ability to teach and train an unorganized group of amateurs to produce excellent results and with great enthusiasm and merit. Wilkinson, a solicitor by profession, had also written the libretto for TTN's comic opera The Killibegs, performed in Cambridge.[85] The Archbishop adjourned the meeting with a statement of concluding thanks and added that, 'Mr. Noble was kind enough to consult with me about this very important change for him, and I was very glad to be able to express my appreciation of him here today. I am sure that all that has been done to-day will be readily and gallantly followed out, and that when Mr. Noble comes back, we shall be able to let him see - so far as any outward token goes - how we have valued what he has done in this place.'[86]

Over the course of the following weeks, the community produced a beautifully coloured embossed booklet of hundreds of signatures from every person who had come in contact with TTN during his time in York. If TTN lacked a sense of his effect on the city and its inhabitants, he was surely aware by this juncture.

In retrospect, TTN's time with Everitt, Strutt, the RCM, Stanford and Trinity and his first cathedral post in Ely, produced an extremely successful vita. TTN reminisced on this period, in particular, the beautiful book filled with the names of his many friends and fellow musicians:

> Following this citation the names of some four hundred people were inscribed. The address which was very beautifully illuminated by Mr E. Ridsdale Tate, was bound in green morocco leather with gilt edges and lined with white watered silk.
>
> The address and signatures occupied eight pages, each of which was illuminated with scroll and other ornamentation, treated with refreshing freedom and convention. On each page there was an exquisite water colour drawing of some aspect of York Minster, the idea of each of these little scenes being to recall the familiar associations of my work in York. The scenes depicted included the organ and screen, the north door, the view from my house, and a charming painting of my home, 1 Minster Court! Portraits of the Archbishop and the Dean occupied prominent positions on one page, the four corner pieces being paintings of the Bars. The English Royal Standard and the Stars and Stripes formed the leading feature of another page, together with the civic arms of York and New York, and a delightful little painting of the Carmania passing the Statue of Liberty. This book revealed interesting creative ability, and is prized by me not only for its artistic achievement, but for the wonderful tribute contained therein.
>
> On Monday evening of the week before I sailed, I gave my farewell organ recital in the Minster. In the programme I included Guilmant's Lamentation for my heart was full of sadness at the thought of leaving York, and a suite by Corelli, pregnant with joy, in anticipation of my life in the new world.
> On Thursday evening, I played my last Evensong. I shall always remember that service for the boys and men gave of their very best. It was a sad moment when the service was over, yet a wonderful memory to carry away after fifteen years of working in a city whose musical traditions were hundreds of years old. On Friday morning we left York for Liverpool on the 9.57 train; on Saturday, I, my wife and son were to sail on the Carmania. As we drove to the railroad station, we were greatly touched to find the twenty choristers lined up at intervals, all the way from the Minster to the station platform. Our farewells were over, the break had been made. As the Carmania ploughed across the Atlantic I looked often toward the western horizon thinking of what my new life would mean. On that voyage more than once I wondered whether I had done the right thing in leaving so wonderful a position and so many loyal and devoted friends to take up a new life amongst strangers. Yet these misgivings never conquered within me an inward urge to accept this new world and carry on my work there with growing eagerness and enthusiasm.[87]

In this move, a man of extraordinary abilities made the decision to leave the only life he had ever known for an unknown and uncertain future. He was certainly well prepared, for every talent he possessed had been tested, assuring him with self-confidence and maturity, even for a man of forty-six years of age. His dealings with the many clergy with whom he had come in contact had taught him valuable lessons, both positive and otherwise, and he was well equipped to deal with the many cultural and musical challenges that awaited him. His numerous compositions, orchestral experiences, and choral and organ work had seasoned him to confront a new culture and country.

CHAPTER THREE

On the Avenue, 1913-1919

3.1 St Thomas Church and New York City

1912 in America was a year filled with iconic events, two of which remain in the collective mind of the world some one hundred years later: first on 14 April, the S. S. Titanic, in its maiden voyage from Liverpool to New York, sank off the coast of Newfoundland; second, Woodrow Wilson defeated Theodore (Teddy) Roosevelt and William Taft for President of the United States, changing the course of American politics.[1] The world was a place filled with ambition, power and wealth, and NYC, for many, was the centre of this prosperity. These were the days when Manhattan was filled with lavish mansions along the avenues and names like John Jacob Astor IV, John Pierpont Morgan, George Vanderbilt, John D. Rockefeller and Andrew Carnegie dominated the business headlines.[2] Business consisted of monopolies, poor industrial working conditions, and unions and labour laws struggling to take hold. It was a time of free enterprise and large fortunes gained and lost - a golden era that would soon fall into the ashes of a world war and the stock market crash of 1929. For a time, however, high society reigned and the period of the grand American Church flourished.

In New York City, the Episcopal Church was dominated by three very large and wealthy parishes: Trinity Church, on Broadway at Wall Street; Grace Church, also on Broadway; and St Thomas Church (STC), located in one of the world's wealthiest neighborhoods on Fifth Avenue - the heart of Manhattan. Since the turn of the century, Trinity and Grace Church had well-established choirs of men and boys, although each faced difficulties in recruitment and financial stability. Following the English model of a choir school only for the boy choristers created problems that would ultimately lead to decisions of mere financial survival rather than artistic freedom.

Grace Church had not always boasted a choir of men and boys, but a significant shift in its music program during the late nineteenth century, saw the demise of the fashionable professional quartet (soprano, contralto, tenor and bass).[3] It was no secret that Grace's rector, William Reed Huntington (1838-1909), had not the ear for music and often feared 'music would overshadow the rest of the service…[he] tolerated music in church services only because it was clearly important to others.'[4] As was the custom of the time, secular music in a concert setting was not as readily accessible to the general public, so newspapers would often review church services for their musical quality, rather than that of a spiritual nature. By 1893, the music of the Grace Church quartet was thought to be rather tired and in due course, began to receive unfavourable reviews in the papers. The organist at the time was Samuel P. Warren (1841-1915), who had been in the post for twenty-six years from 1893.[5] Following a harsh write-up in the New York Times, the vestry put forth a motion to every head of household, setting forth various options for the future of the music programme:

1) a quartet and chorus
2) single quartet
3) double quartet
4) vested choir of men and boys

After the vote the results showed such an even balance of preference that Dr. Huntington at first concluded that the wisest course would be to retain the current system and simply work to improve it. But the boychoir forces [continued] to press their case, for at the Vestry meeting in November 1893 it was voted that the Rector and Wardens be authorized to negotiate with one James Morris

Helfenstein, with a view to engaging him as choirmaster for the year beginning May 1, 1894. The plan was to have a choir of forty voices, twenty-four of them boys.[6]

Grace Church (and STC, for that matter) were constantly aware of the presence of the mother church, downtown – Trinity Wall Street. Trinity had a very high opinion of its place in church hierarchy and after many years exuded an atmosphere that many found cold and unfriendly.

Grace Church was always filled to the utmost capacity while wealthy, pretentious Trinity, "the Mother of us all" … could fitly be compared to "a banquet hall deserted." . . . Grace presented nothing to command attention… Nevertheless it [Trinity] was the Church.[7]

Trinity moved towards a proper vested choir of men and boys in 1839, when Edward Hodges, originally brought over from Bristol, took charge of the programme.[8] 'He immediately took steps to bring Trinity's music as near as possible to the standards of the English Cathedral service. At the consecration of the new church building on Ascension Day 1846, special music was sung by a choir of fourteen boys and a double-quartet (consisting of women's voices).'[9]

3.2 Ernest M. Stires

STC was originally located in Greenwich Village on Broadway at Houston Street, but following two fires, the congregation relocated to the more desirable and fashionable Fifth Avenue. Built on Fifth Avenue and 53rd Street in 1870, the third STC was designed by the famous Architect Richard Upjohn (1802-1878).[10] In 1905 the church was again plagued by a fire - caused by a wiring malfunction in the organ.[11] Following the tragedy, the church engaged the architectural firm of Cram, Goodhue and Ferguson, with Ralph Adams Cram and Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue at the helm, to design a new and even grander edifice. Construction began in 1911 and was completed during 1913. The Rector at the time was Ernest M. Stires (EMS). During his long and fruitful tenure, he saw that STC was placed on a strong musical and liturgical foundation. EMS, born one year before TTN in 1866, was raised in Norfolk, Virginia, an old colonial town on the Atlantic coast. He was educated at the University of Virginia and the Virginia Theological Seminary (VTS), having been ordained to the Priesthood in 1892 by Bishop Alfred Magill Randolph of Southern Virginia.[12] He was a unique man with many talents, such that he was chosen to become the Rector of STC in 1901 at the young age of thirty-four. His training from VTS provided him with a very broad church (Church of England) background. The seminary was (and still is) notorious for its low-church practices, but EMS generated a warmth and fervour that combined charm with his evangelical background.

TTN and EMS possessed complementary personalities and ideals that made for an intuitive working relationship. Both men felt deeply the importance of personal relationships with their charges and colleagues. TTN proved his loyalty with the extensive work in York to build a community base that advocated for the highest quality of music. The sheer out-pouring of grief on his departure to NYC provided convincing evidence to his new congregation and clergy that his ways were indeed formative, trustworthy and successful.[13] EMS, likewise, felt the importance of cultivating friendships and educating others to a level of understanding that complemented his own skills and ideals. A rector is often chastised for focusing inwardly on his parish and neglecting the needs of the greater community (the poor, lonely and oppressed.) EMS found this common criticism flattering and remarked:

[12] Ibid., p. 118.
[13] See ch. 2, p. 42 passim.

What is the mission of St. Thomas's? "To the poor," I can hear many reply. The answer is good, but not exact. The mission of St. Thomas's is to the well-to-do. Things are unequally distributed in this world, and it may be that in another world "one star differeth from another star in glory." At any rate, many suffer here from having too little, and many from having too much. One class is unable to get the relief it needs, and the other has not learned to give relief in its power… The mission of St. Thomas's is to help us to save ourselves by saving others; to regard all our successes, our influence, our money, as worth nothing in themselves, but worth much when devoted to elevating humanity.[14]

These words were spoken some twelve years before TTN arrived in New York, at a time when STC was uncertain of its identity and how it could best use its position to enact cultural and social change. TTN's philosophy was in agreement with the rector's statement. He believed that one must strive for the best conditions for music's sake and to surround one's self with as much influence and power as humanly possible. This outlook was essentially derived from his background and apprenticeship with Stanford. In addition, his social connections with the well-to-do and powerful instilled in him the will to achieve great art and, moreover, to convince others of its place and worth in society.

When EMS took office in 1901, the music programme was less than grand, but one that the church found suitable for its needs. While Trinity and Grace Church were locked in a war of which was the church, STC, due to its stable leadership, was more focused on educating a people about their role in the city and the larger world. The Sunday service served as a platform to display conduct, featuring eloquent speech and gentlemanly ways, while the more pretentious, high-church scenes downtown generated no interest for EMS or STC. His charismatic personality immediately brought new people into his church, which spawned a flurry of changes. The most notable adjustments were to the liturgical life of the parish.

The weekly Sunday communion services were continued at the early service, but at the second service Communion was now limited to twice monthly; on the first and third Sundays. Morning Prayer preceded the celebration of the third Sunday. On the second and fourth Sundays, clergy and people joined in Morning Prayer and the Litany. Evensong was introduced on Tuesdays and Thursdays during the week, but Evening Prayer on Wednesdays and Fridays was eliminated. [15]

The STC choir of men and boys began to wear vestments in 1902, under then organist and choirmaster, Will C. Macfarlane.[16] (WM) The choir's repertoire during the early twentieth century was very American in nature, although it possessed a flare of what was thought to be an English cathedral model. As was true of Trinity Church and Grace Church in earlier years, many Episcopal church choirs consisted mostly of soloists and quartets, although STC had boys in the choir as early as 1870, joining the other singers, who augmented the paid solo quartet.[17] Large children's choirs were also part of many churches, but their function was more for providing music in Sunday School chapels and assemblies. Such a programme existed with the boys and girls choirs of Trinity Episcopal Church, Houston, Texas. By 1919, Trinity possessed the largest church school programme in the country, boasting some six hundred members at its peak.[18]

3.3 The quartet and Anglican Church music in early-America

Churches such as Trinity, Grace, and STC had long disbanded with quartets by the first decade of the twentieth century, but this was still slow in coming to the rest of the liturgical world.

> By the time of the Civil War, the solo quartet – "quartette," as it was usually spelled – either alone or with a chorus of volunteers, reigned pre-eminent in churches of all denominations (and synagogues), especially in cities. Such groups of professionals had appeared early in the nineteenth century to lead congregational psalmody where there was no choir. As rector of Grace Church in New York during the 1820s, Jonathan Mayhew Wainwright paid out of his own pocket for a handful of soloist to lead congregational psalmody. By the 1860s, there was a growing repertoire of church music especially for soloists and quartets. In general, this music was in the fashionable, quasi-operatic style that signified culture and taste on the part of singer and listener alike, much to the delight (although not always for the religious edification) of the Sunday congregation. By 1861, following a survey of over one hundred and thirty New York churches, seventy-two of them had solo or double quartets.[19]

[17] 'The choir consists of a quartette of soloists…In addition to these singers, there is a volunteer chorus of ladies, gentlemen and boys, twenty-five in all – and all selected voices…The places for the choir being in the choir proper on either side of the chancel, the members can enjoy the services and privileges of the pulpit and enter into their part of the service with a fervor that the ordinary isolation of the organ-loft rarely inspires. They were not, and will not be surpliced.' (Opening of the New St. Thomas's Church, The Church Journal 18, 12 October 1870).

The quartet was utilized in many denominations, and particularly took root in less sophisticated parishes and small churches. Mr. Edmund S. Lorenz (a publisher of music for the small church volunteer choir) even developed a periodical called The Choir Leader, later becoming The Volunteer Choir, which provided music for these groups; often times shortening and simplifying choruses from oratorios and other popular music of the day.[20] The quartet in the Episcopal church, by and large, was short-lived, and by the mid to late nineteenth century, found itself being pushed out, boy's voices being much preferred to those of grown women.[21] In a real sense, the American boy-choir movement (like the generally increased attention to ceremony and beauty in worship) may be seen as a function of the mid- and late-nineteenth century American neo-medievalism, itself a quite different affair from the medievalism of the English romantic period fifty years earlier.[22]

For at least two centuries prior, the function of a vocal choir, and even the use of pipe organs varied from place to place in America. In urban cities during the eighteenth century, organs were met with much resistance, claiming a strong connection to England, which for the Puritans was seen as a conflict of interest. It was only in Episcopal parishes that organs were used and seen as an enhancement to worship.[23] As for vocal music and its resources in the churches:

> Hymnals and service books were difficult to procure, and the primarily Dutch Lutherans of New York had nothing like the singing tradition of their German co-religionists…The situation was somewhat better among the Anglicans at nearby Trinity Church. The vestry had adopted Tate and Brady's Psalter in 1707, and a clerk led the congregation in the few tunes necessary to accommodate its limited number of meters. Trinity followed the pattern of a number of urban churches in England. The vestry had established a charity school in 1709, and in April 1739, anticipating the arrival of an organ contracted a year earlier, the parish began to use children to lead congregational singing.[24]

[20] 'Lorenz began his publications with the The Choir Leader in 1894. Three years later, he began The Choir Herald as a magazine containing easier and popular anthems. In 1913 he began The Volunteer Choir, a third magazine, containing material nearer the "gospel song" in mood and musical content.' (Ellinwood, p. 71.)

The Reverend William Smith (born in Scotland in 1754) who was ordained in the Scottish Episcopal Church in 1774, came to America in 1784, and after several short appointments, became the rector of St. Paul's Church, Narragansett, Rhode Island in 1787. It was at St. Paul's that Smith introduced the use of Anglican chant; moreover, in the coming years his interest in restoring the liturgy and Anglican chant led him to edit The Churchman's Choral Companion to His Prayer Book published in 1809.[25]

3.4 Will C. Macfarlane and TTN

Some ten years after WM began at STC, he found himself on a summer holiday in England that would change the direction of the church's music programme forever. In the manner in which the influential Richard Strutt and Charles Everritt had entered TTN's life as total strangers, the irony of his meeting with WM made a fitting addition to this series of serendipities. In the summer of 1912, WM and his wife spent their holiday travelling in England. TTN's work was known to WM, and for that matter, most musicians in New York. He was particularly interested in the sound of the English cathedral choir, although the work ethic behind the sound would have been unfamiliar to him as an American. WM found himself in York during his holiday and made contact with TTN at that time. It was well known that the reputation of the Minister choir was the sole result of TTN's expertise, and WM was eager to observe his qualities.[26]

He sat in the organ loft with TTN during the services, so he might learn more about how an English Cathedral organist produced this level of ecclesiastical performance. The two men were friendly, although one might gather WM had a strong air of self confidence that could be viewed as arrogant or better yet, rude.

[25] Ibid., pp. 97-98.
[26] Yorkshire Observer, 15 April 1912.

TTN remarked on a pivotal conversation he initiated with him, following a service in the minster:

> On one of these occasions I asked him very casually whether there was any chance of my getting a good post in New York City, for of late the challenge of a musical life in the United States was at times strongly in my thoughts. The fact was I was getting tired of cathedral life, having had twenty years of it. Macfarlane's answer was short and to the point: 'There is one church that you could go to, and that one is St. Thomas, but I am organist there and there is little chance of my leaving.'[27]

Both men parted on cordial terms; TTN would not forget this conversation nor would WM forget TTN's confession of an interest in a new life outside England.

TTN, due to press reports, was indeed becoming more and more known in North America for his work in York. An American newspaper highlighted the Minister in a series on cathedral music, which put into place many reasons why TTN was undoubtedly selected as the best man for the job:

> There is at least one cathedral north of London which may be the Mecca of any musician in search of a beautiful Church service beautifully done. That is York.
>
> Tertius Noble, whose admirable compositions are figuring more and more on the lists of the more capable American choirs, has built here a body of boys and men that for understanding intellectual equipment, tone quality and ensemble I have never heard quite equalled. Thirty gentlemen's sons from a country school were guests the afternoon I was there, and the minster boys had selected as most likely to please them Walmisley's evening service in D, and S. S. Wesley's fine and lengthy "The Wilderness." I wondered where in America would choirboys select such a programme and school boys recognize the delicacy.
>
> York does what, as far as I was able to ascertain, no other cathedral in England does: she is making her choirboys musicians as well as choristers. Two or three of the older lads are always with Mr. Noble in the organ at service. One, I understand, is his assistant. Another played the piano, and very well, at the impromtu concert that the choirboys gave for their young guests. Mr. Noble is fortunate in that his headmaster, Mr. Scaife, is a man who is in entire sympathy with the musical part of the boy's education, makes theory part of their daily school work and teaches it to them personally, leaving the choirmaster free to concern himself only with tone and niceties of performance. It is pretty likely that every other choirmaster in England envies Mr. Noble the possession of Mr. Scaife.
> Choirmasters concerned with the problem of getting voices will be interested to know that York draws from a limited field. There is only a day school, and the boys all come from the town and belong to what is called the lower middle class. Yet York does not suffer for boys, and Mr. Noble estimated that the lads have working repertory of some 600 anthems and 150 services.[28]

By the end of the summer of 1912, construction on the fourth STC building was well under way. Much to WM's surprise upon returning to the United States, certain aspects of the building project had been changed: namely adjustments which greatly reduced the space allotted for the music rehearsal hall.[29] This caused him much frustration and ultimately resulted in his abrupt and hasty resignation. There are no recorded accounts of his resigning due to unhappiness with the building project; rather, it was stated that he resigned to accept an offer as the new city municipal organist in Portland, Maine.[30] The vestry also recorded their thanks and appreciation for his diligent work, particularly during the difficult time following the 1905 fire.[31] It is only in the Noble Memoirs that the disagreement of the size and shape of the choir rehearsal hall is mentioned.[32] On the last Sunday in September [1912] STC bade farewell to WM. The entire service was filled with his music, with the exception of the hymns,[33] and EMS's remarks were a sincere representation of the emotion the church felt over losing a fine organist.[34]

With the dilemma of finding a new musician to conduct a great choir and play a grand new organ in the soon-to-be-completed church, EMS sought the advice of WM, who, upon recalling his encounter in York, spoke of TTN's interest in possibly moving to America, and recommended TTN as the only possible choice suitable for STC.[35] EMS immediately wrote to TTN and placed upon him the great burden of whether or not to leave the only life he had ever known as an English cathedral organist and move to a new country. The British press even took note of the offer and wrote several articles highlighting the situation, 'There is no need to wish Mr. Noble a Happy New Year, if the rumor one hears about his new salary is correct.'[36]

The scenario of leaving a secure position for the unknown recalls a similar situation of Stanford offering TTN a position at Cambridge and the decision of whether to abandon a predictable career path for an unknown opportunity.[37] Perhaps understandably, TTN replied to EMS, voicing his concerns of job security and the happiness of his wife and son, and moreover, how moving to a new country could possibly jeopardize what many in England viewed as the perfect career in motion. He also informed EMS of a forthcoming Atlantic crossing for a recital tour in January of 1913, and hoped that a proper visit and discussion could be had at that time. EMS replied:

Dear Mr. Noble, On my return to the city after an absence of a few days I found your letter awaiting me. It is of course easy to understand that you do not find it convenient to come to this country at once in order to confer with our music committee with a view to ascertaining whether an arrangement satisfactory to us all could be made. I realize that your plan for coming in December makes the prior journey doubly difficult. Mr. Macfarlane has told you of our warm interest in and respect for you and your work. Personally I feel it is well worth our while to postpone our decision a little that you may have the fullest opportunity for understanding the nature of the work which you might be asked to undertake. I imagine Mr. Macfarlane has made you acquainted with the general character of the work. I will not undertake to enlarge upon the character of the opportunity as we see it, though my statement that almost every organist and choirmaster of note in America has either personally or through friends made application to be considered for this vacancy, may indicate to some extent the respect with which the position is regarded in this country. I particularly wish that you and I might have a good talk about it all. St. Thomas has an opportunity unparalleled in the Anglican Communion, and we must make the most of it. To my assurance or regard for yourself may I add a similar expression for Mrs. Noble, whom I have had the privilege of knowing only through her revered father, who as Dean of Ely, preached a notable sermon in my church in Chicago many years ago.

Yours very faithfully,

Ernest M. Stires[38]

TTN responded to EMS with an encouraging rejoinder, but still tried to convince him to wait until they could speak face-to-face in January. EMS replied:

Dear Mr Noble, Your good letter of 29 October reached me today and I hasten to thank you and to tell you of my strong conviction, that it is prophetic of happy associations and greater effectiveness in the beauty and dignity of worship in St. Thomas Parish and a real stimulus of ecclesiastic music in America. I am convinced you will find here many who are prepared to do their utmost to help you to make your coming to America mean all of this and more.

The plan you suggest is the best: that you meet the Committee as soon as possible after you arrive, and that if all goes well you should prepare to take up your work as soon as possible. Do I understand that you are definitely pledged to a two-month' tour? If this must be, it must be, but I wish there were a probability of our setting together for work quickly.

My wife wishes to join me in the hope that Mrs. Noble is to accompany you when you come over on December 28 and in the assurance that Mrs. Noble's new friends will do all in their power to help her feel at home and to assuage a little of the inevitable grief at leaving England and all its dear associations.

By the way, at Evensong last Sunday our choir sang your Souls of the righteous with great effectiveness.

One of your surprises will be the discovery that you are already well known in America,

With every good wish,

Yours faithfully,

Ernest M. Stires.[39]

TTN responded with his final communication before the meeting, to which EMS replied on 9 December 1912:

Dear Mr Noble, I will gladly arrange for our Committee to meet you on the Saturday or Sunday after your arrival, and I appreciate your not making engagements during the month of February, thus providing for a satisfactory decision at our meeting, and a possible early beginning of our work.

Your closing sentence is properly descriptive of the proper attitude for all of us, 'I think it is better for us to see one another, before finally settling', and yet I am sure that you hope with us that the result will be the beginning of a very happy chapter of your life and ours, and of Church music in America.

Yours faithfully,

Ernest M. Stires.[40]

It was clear from EMS's communications that he fully intended for TTN to accept his offer and move to New York, sight unseen. One can only assume that TTN's reputation was such that the rector was willing to risk offering such a prestigious post without ever having heard TTN's organ playing or his choirs sing. Although, due to his compositions and various writings on music, a man of EMS's educational background is likely to have known of TTN's reputation. This points to a sad situation in our modern day wherein so many clergy live inside the four walls of their parishes, purposefully ignorant of the larger world. The fear of someone noticing that they're not as brilliant as they have led one to believe is crippling. STC fostered a community of knowledge and growth, particularly on an international scale, thus the overwhelming success of EMS as rector. TTN voiced his misgivings on the looming prospects:

> To come to the United States at the age of forty-five, and to settle in the largest and most materialistic city in the country, was not an easy matter to settle when my friends, particularly those of the musical profession, were so against my leaving England. The Dean of York was bitterly opposed to the change calling it 'a gamble in the dark.' At that time the Dean was an old man, and did not at his advanced years relish my leaving the Minster. Though I admired him for his many sterling qualities I realized that in a problem such as I faced it was not sensible to heed his advice too seriously. However, the reactions of my former teachers gave me far greater concern.[41]

TTN arrived in the United States on Wednesday, 8 January 1913, almost three days late, following a long and dangerous voyage on the S. S. Carmania. The ship, which departed from Liverpool on 28 December 1912 encountered very rough seas, even sailing through a hurricane.[42] TTN travelled alone on this journey; MSN stayed behind with friends in Liverpool.[43] TTN was met at the New York dock by a former pupil who had studied boy choir work in York; his name was Charles Wheeler Barnes, and his son Edward also greeted TTN on this occasion. He stayed in the Barnes's home in Manhattan during this time.[44]

The prior discussions with his friends and mentors weighed very heavily on TTN's mind at this point. He knew the first order of business was to contact EMS, particularly in view of his late arrival. His most trusted of all mentors, Walter Parratt, did not react favourably to this offer in New York. His rationale included considering the fact that places like Westminster Abbey might become available to him in the near future, and what a shame it would be to pass up such a chance. TTN, however, reminded himself of the Trinity College debacle, and quickly ruled out Parratt's reasoning, as he articulated in his Memoirs:[45]

> Our talk was a serious one, and I could easily see that this good friend was not in favour of my leaving York Minster, pointing out that if I remained in England there were other positions that might fall my way, mentioning Westminster Abbey...Also, from my own point of view, after 20 years of cathedral life, Westminster Abbey held little interest. If I had not been appointed to a cathedral post at the very early age of 25, my attitude towards the American offer probably would have been very different. In those twenty years I had been responsible for approximately 14,500 choral services at Ely Cathedral and York Minster, and had accompanied most of them myself. It was a hard grind with only a comparatively short holiday during the summer. In New York I would only have two choral services a week with a few extra services from time to time, and at the time of my appointment the guarantee of four months' holiday every year, from 1 June till 1 October...An offer from New York, with its challenge and opportunity, appealed. I'd always liked the American people, and their unbounded enthusiasm and openness of outlook...I was sorry that these men at the Royal College of Music were not able to see beyond the horizon of their own musical world.[46]

The promise of a new way of life and new musical regime must have loomed large in TTN's imagination and hopes. He was entering a very different culture and atmosphere. In one sense there was the prospect of greater flexibility, free from the onerous daily schedule of services he had experienced hitherto. In the United States, 'church' was reserved for Sundays only. They saw no need or bother to sing the daily office. The American church was little concerned with maintaining this ancient tradition, which was long lost in the forming of the Episcopal Church in the United States after the eighteenth-century revolution. Yet, in another sense TTN would have to confront a much 'lower' understanding of the liturgy, the church year, its calendar and, from a higher church perspective, the role of the sacraments. This emphasis on the sacraments would, in time, be the source of many animated discussions throughout the history and evolution of choral worship of STC. Instituting a daily Eucharist, along with sung morning and evening prayer was viewed as arguing 'High Church vs. Low Church' and each rector had an opinion about how the liturgy and how worship should be conducted.[47] It was thought that anything of an ornate and ritualistic nature was too Roman and highly un-Anglican. TTN would have been more familiar with these 'higher' practices at York, but at STC this manner of worship was barely familiar. Hence he faced a challenge in reconciling his desire for musical standards and richness with a Sunday-led style of worship.

It would be in the words of the Archbishop of York, Cosmo Lang, that TTN found the strength and resolve he needed to press onward.[48] Lang suggested that TTN might, in fact, take something of the old world to the new world and from there would change the culture of music and take part in a broader understanding of what it means to be a musician, particularly in the English cathedral tradition.[49]

In her dissertation on the life and works of TTN, Camilla Jarnot attempts to explain TTN's interest and acceptance of the new post in America. Her discussion suggests that, for TTN, positions of higher prestige (such as St Paul's or Westminster Abbey) were unattainable for him, and his only recourse was to move away and start afresh.[50] There is no mention of his relationship to the city of York or the definite way in which his life was bound to the city and its congregation. Such an account lacks concrete evidence; moreover, from TTN's own account from his Memoirs, we learn that he was somewhat jaundiced by the repetitive and unforgiving schedule that he had experienced ay Ely and York and was searching for a way of life that provided more space and time as well as greater pecuniary reward.

TTN made contact with EMS after his arrival, and a meeting took place on either 9 or 10 January 1913 (Thursday or Friday of that week). In the rector's report for the year, EMS remarked that TTN had immediately accepted the church's offer and that all was settled. This statement is true; however, TTN did not do anything immediately. The advice of a famous friend and colleague added a condition to the process, for on 26 December 1912, two days before his departure, a letter from Edward Elgar was delivered to No. 1 Minster Court. Elgar cautioned TTN to 'have

3.5 TTN accepts STC post

The meeting that ensued with the three men of the music committee, Charles Steele,[52] chairman; William H. Truesdale and Robert B. Dodson, and EMS was coloured by Elgar's words:

> Very shortly the meeting got under way and after a brief conversation I [TTN] was invited to accept the position. This I was willing to do providing a contract was drawn up. For some reason the committee would not do this, and as I would not accept without it, we were deadlocked. While this controversy, friendly enough, was in progress Charles Steele had said very little, but I had noticed that his sharp brown eyes, behind which was the brilliant mind controlling the legal affairs of Pierpont Morgan & Co of which firm he was a partner, had been taking in everything that had been going on. Quietly, he rose from his chair, came over to mine, grasped my hand warmly, and said: Mr. Noble, no contract is necessary for as long as I am chairman of the Music Committee you can have my word that you will not be turned out of St. Thomas'. I instinctively felt that the strength of this man's hand clasp, his quiet friendly smile, and, above all, his spoken word were to be more trusted than any contract, whereupon I accepted the position, and immediately Dr. Stires cabled the Dean of York of this fact. That trust in Mr. Steele was never betrayed. [53]

Steele was well known on Wall Street and in the world of business. He was a partner at J. P. Morgan and Company with offices on Wall Street, and devoted much of his time to the Episcopal Church and the Metropolitan Opera.

After accepting the position, TTN remained in the company of the church through the following Sunday, 12 January, the First Sunday after the Epiphany. He attended the 11 a.m. service of Morning Prayer, during which the religious experience included what he would have thought a less-than-desirable menu of musical choices.[54] The anthem that day was Gounod's Sanctus.[55] TTN was not fond of Gounod's music in the church. He later learned that EMS enjoyed Gounod's anthems. 'I [TTN] didn't. French lyric opera is excellent on the stage, but in my opinion not acceptable in the house of God. As time went on, we did less and less of this composer's music.'[56] The liturgical service music on that day was filled with common Anglican chants, which would have been sung by choir and congregation. The hymns were DIX sung to the words 'As with gladness men of old'; SWABIA 'This is the day of Light'; WATCHMAN 'Watchman, tell us of the night'; and 'Brightest and Best' sung to Mozart's tune, which did not exist in the hymnal; rather it contained Mendelssohn's tune BRIGHTEST AND BEST.[57]

After settling his affairs in New York, TTN continued on his two-month recital tour, playing all over the east coast as well as in Canada. The music committee at STC expected TTN to begin work immediately, but they understood his pre-arranged recital schedule and the need to return to York to complete the important task of saying goodbye.[58] TTN returned to England in early March, leaving MSN and their young son PRN (only ten years of age) with less than a month to prepare for the move to the new world. Whilst aboard the S.S. Carmania, they travelled in the first class cabin, enjoying a place of which in society an average musician and his family could only dream. [59] TTN's fame and good luck again allowed for a chance to live an extraordinarily stylish life and in a new and ever-changing world.

STC was electric with excitement over having hired one of the world's greatest musicians. The strong men of the music committee, combined with the brilliant EMS, had found an equal in the musician and personality of TTN. They realized he possessed the skills of not only a musician, but also those of a politician, businessman and gentleman. Church work in America can often be played by unusual (passive aggressive) rules that are very parochial in nature. STC was a place where social-standing determined power, leaving many important decisions in the hands of the wealthy parishioners and the rector. The English system of a Dean and Chapter making all decisions and rulings without the aid of numerous lay committees was all TTN knew at this point in his career. He was given the authority by the rector and the BCP, to pick all of the music for the services at the church. TTN knew what was preferred by EMS and was very careful and political in his decisions. Pleasing not only the rector and committees of STC was a daily requirement, but also, the average parishioner in the pew had a right to voice opinions. No doubt his skills at conversation, coupled with his English accent and charm did him many favours in the first weeks of his time in New York.

One man from the music committee who immediately became TTN's friend and ally was its chairman, Charles Steele. Steele was born into a wealthy Maryland family in 1856 and was married into an old Virginia family.[60] Steele had a love of music and a good sense for identifying talent and potential in other individuals. At the time he pledged his support for TTN, he also gave him a gift even greater - his stamp of approval by association. Steele and his wife lived (with nine servants) in their Manhattan mansion, located at 11 East 62nd Street. This house is still standing today, although many of the private homes along the avenues were torn town in the name of progress and industry. The Steele mansion also contained a pipe organ built by the Aeolian company and containing some 17 ranks over two manuals.[61]

3.6 The move from York

The Nobles finally arrived in New York harbour on 27 April 1913 and were again greeted by the Barnes family.[62] Their temporary place of residence was the Great Northern Hotel, a luxury hotel built in 1910 and located near STC on W 56th Street between Sixth and Seventh Avenues. It must be noted with some irony that the Nobles departed from Liverpool on 19 April, exactly one year and five days after the S. S. Titanic sank making the same voyage to America. The remembrance of the one year anniversary of the tragedy was marked in a service at the church, complete with the vested choir, EMS preaching and surviving family members present.[63]

After checking into the hotel, the Nobles literally walked straight to STC and attended Evensong.[64] The choir sang, of all things, Stanford in B flat, with the anthem 'In Heavenly Love Abiding' by the well-known American composer Horatio Parker.[65] In the early days, Evensong was sung once a week, on Sundays at 4 p.m. This, however, was not full English cathedral choral evensong; this was a very American adaptation from the 1892 BCP, which included processional and recessional hymns as well as a verbal address from the rector. The psalmody followed the 'cathedral psalter' which was a divison developed by and not congruent with the 1662 cycle or the Miles Coverdale translation.

The Nobles were very warmly received by the parish, which knew the importance of TTN and the potential he brought to the church. He was very eager to begin work, for he knew better than anyone that there was much to do and more importantly, much to change! MSN was TTN's silent parent in this great endeavour. Like so many women of this era, they were the backbone behind very strong and powerful men. After arrival, MSN came down with a very serious illness and spent eight weeks in hospital following a surgical operation. This was a very emotional time for TTN, having just moved his family to a new world, and thankfully, she made a full recovery. This could not have been an easy time for MSN, having lost her father only a year before leaving England.[66]

In September, having spent the summer in a luxury hotel on Long Island, the Nobles set out to find a suitable place in which to live. This was no small task, considering the palatial estate they had occupied at No 1 Minster Court in York. New York property was scarce, and even more so, highly expensive. Eventually, they settled for a seven-room apartment that was close to the church and adequate for their needs until something more to their liking could be found.[67] However, TTN's financial situation with the church was certainly highly amenable. The Vestry agreed to pay him $4800 per annum for his services as Organist and Choirmaster.[68] This was substantially more generous than anything he might have secured in England.

In October (1913) the new church building was ready for occupation. TTN's first few months were spent working in the temporary wooden structure, complete with a melodeon 'pumped' by a coloured man named George.[69] TTN found the choir in some ways much akin to the pathetic organ. There were many boys, in total forty-six in number, whose voices had 'broken' and they soon left the choir.[70] This left TTN with an extremely young and inexperienced lot - a problem he had not seen since his time at Trinity College Cambridge. He immediately spoke of this problem with the rector and made it perfectly clear that the only way to correct the situation was to form a choir school, where he would have complete oversight of the boys and could properly train them in the way he wished them to sing.[71] The promise of a school had been made to TTN during his hiring interview, so there was no question of reneguing on this decision by the vestry. TTN was, therefore, determined to see this through, although the work of convincing the church was left to him, with the total support (or permission) of the rector and music committee, but little imagination of how to implement such a feat.

3.7 Promise of a Choir School

In an interview in early 1913 with the Canadian Guild of Organists Journal, TTN stated 'They are giving me a choir school at St. Thomas's similar to those existing in the cathedral of England, where boys will be educated and trained as choristers.'[72] He might have been under the impression that all of this would happen because it had been agreed. Nevertheless, all that had been granted was permission; no money or external resources had been discussed. It was up to TTN to educate and convince the people of STC why they should allow him to proceed in this manner which, after all, had been the very raison-d'être for his accession to the organistship.

The boys at this time came from all over Manhattan, Queens, Brooklyn and even New Jersey, utilizing the subway system, which was in its infancy. To complicate matters, the New York public school system's constantly changing schedule made it nearly impossible for the boys to attend after-school practices, causing much frustration for TTN.[73] The choir rehearsals were on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons, with an additional rehearsal including the men on Friday evenings.[74] EMS helped to give voice to the 'boy' situation in his report, reflecting on the year 1913:

[72] Canadian Organists Journal, January 1913, p. 4.
[73] PYB 1914-1918, reflecting on the need for a choir school.
[74] PYB Calendar 1913. This schedule remained unchanged until the formation of the choir school in 1919.

Mr. Noble, the Organist and Choirmaster came to us from York Minster in May and has since been grappling with the many problems of his important work. His intelligence and energy, coupled with a real understanding and sympathy, will soon produce a remarkable choir. His methods are quiet and thorough; they are certain to be crowned with great success, and recently we have enjoyed a marked improvement in the quality of our music. If we did not have so many other things to do in the immediate future we might well undertake to provide a new choir school, through which alone will it be possible for us to obtain satisfactory musical results. Trinity Church, Grace Church and the Cathedral have clearly recognized this, and some day (may it be soon!) we must do likewise. This will be the more necessary inasmuch as the time is not far distant when there should be daily morning and evening prayer in the church, with at least a small choir. [75]

EMS's words of sympathetic support of TTN and his goals are remarkable. In truth the predicament of Grace Church and other institutions was little different from that of STC, yet, clearly EMS was determined to make a case for his church, and if this meant making a questionable comparison with his 'competitors,' his goal at STC was worth achieving nonetheless. In this sense TTN had an unstinting ally.

The strong relationship and open communication between these two men are what made STC so quickly successful. The many fruitful years to follow were also enhanced by Steele's devotion to TTN, in addition to his financial backing. When EMS and the music committee met with TTN in January of 1913, they knew they were in the company of a special musician, but even more, a man with clear goals and visions for the implementation of unrealized dreams. The vestry minutes following the receipt of TTN's letter of employment noted:

I look forward to many years of happy work in St. Thomas's Parish and I will do everything in my power to make the service of the Church as devotional and beautiful as possible, and trust that all will help me in my work to stamp out anything which is not worthy of such a beautiful place of worship.[76]

The music programme, from the time of WM's departure until TTN's arrival, was operated by WM's loyal assistant, G. Darlington Richards (GDR). After working only two months with TTN, he left STC to take up the post at St James Church, Madison Avenue. TTN remarked of GDR's kindness and help given to him after his arrival in the new world.[77] This left TTN with the task of finding a suitable partner to help in the undertaking of the greatest challenge of his life - the formation of a proper English cathedral choir, and without the aid of a choir school or a national tradition. He soon hired the talented and supportive Daniel R. Philippi. DRP was about twenty-three years of age at this time and had been acquainted with STC since 1903, the year of his confirmation at the church.[78] Having studied the organ with WM, DRP successfully filled the post of organist at All Souls Church, located on St Nicholas Avenue in Harlem - a less than desirable location to Fifth Avenue. He was a hard worker and a notable talent, such that his skills and personality soon caught the attention of TTN.[79] TTN and DRP worked very well together and inspired a drive for excellence and improvement in the choir.

A good deal of new music has been introduced of late into the service lists, and it is most gratifying to find the whole choir so keen and enthusiastic at our rehearsals. They literally thirst for new things, and as time goes on, I hope to introduce many beautiful specimens of the "English Cathedral School."[80]

3.8 Choral repertoire

TTN felt very strongly about his work at STC, and was determined to find a way around the issues surrounding the public school system and the training of the boys. The choir struggled to meet his expectations in the first year, as can be observed by the limited and repetitious repertoire sung in the Sunday services.[81] However, one can see the trend of introducing new music and the attempt to broaden the repertoire. In 1913 alone, the choir sang eight 'cathedral' settings of the Magnificat, including services by Harwood, Stainer, Stanford and Walmisley.[82] There is also evidence from the music lists that TTN wished to remove all unwanted items (such as the anthems of Gounod) that he disliked and thought unsuitable and to establish, instead, a wider repertoire of English composers.[83]

TTN's training, under Stanford, advocated the highest level of excellence and taste in all things. His fifteen years in York also helped solidify his liturgical palate to complement his already strong musical convictions. Before his arrival at STC, he had not worked in a situation without access to highly trained boys of talent and ability. In NYC he encountered having to accept what was available, which, in many cases, was not to his accustomed standard.[84] Initially he focused on improving the quality of performance in regard to the choral repertoire but he was also rudely aware that the boys desperately lacked a controlled teaching environment which made the task of lifting standards that much more challenging.

The congregation of STC, from all accounts, was discerning in its musical taste, but it was likely a situation of 'they knew what they liked, and they liked what they knew'. Whether or not this matched TTN's expectation of music he thought worthy of the grand new edifice was not important in the early days; he knew, from experience that developing and educating the congregation's ear to understand what he, as their musician thought was appropriate, must come first. The congregation's liturgical musical participation involved the singing of hymns and service music (canticles, psalms, etc.). When TTN arrived in 1913, STC utilised the 1892 Hymnal edited by William Rousseau (dates unknown) and John Ireland Tucker (1819-1895). The first edition edited by Rousseau and Tucker had been published in 1871. Prior to that, the Episcopal Church in America used Hymns Ancient and Modern, first published in 1861 by Novello:

> In 1868, the Episcopal Church's General Convention formed a commission to prepare an official American hymnal. In the meantime, Hymns Ancient and Modern was reprinted in this country, and Episcopal bishops were authorized by General Convention to license its use in their parishes pending its completion of the American collection. In 1871, it was determined that the new hymnal, unlike the previous collections, would not be bound as a supplement with the Book of Common Prayer. A year later, the Hymnal according to the Use of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States appeared. It contained 520 hymns, which were organized in accordance with the seasons of the church year. Changes and additions in 1874 brought the total to 532. Unlike Hymns Ancient and Modern, no tunes were officially authorized for the American collection…At least five musical editions were published, of which the most widely used was that prepared by the rector and organist of Holy Cross Church in

Troy, New York. John Ireland Tucker and William Rousseau's The Hymnal with Tunes Old and New went through four subsequent editions…until the 1892 revision [which] raised the number of hymns to 692.[85]

The 1892 hymnal was the primary source of hymnody, although a smaller hymnal, edited by James H. Darlington (published in 1897), was used on occasion.[86] Hymn page numbers were displayed on wooden boards located on the stone columns within the church while printed orders of service were reserved for special services and holidays only. TTN was displeased with the quality of hymnody in his first year and made bold attempts to alter tunes and texts to suit a more English genre; moreover, he undoubtedly embraced the policy of the panel responsible for the subsequently unsuccessful 1904 edition of Hymns Ancient & Modern, whose mission had been the elevation of higher 'taste'. Adopting this stance was by no means an easy task when faced with an American tradition of a broad Protestant background, unfamiliar with the Tractarian traditions of hymnody in England. Such a tradition was largely 'foreign' to TTN's sensibilities. One such instance was the Palm Sunday Confirmation tradition; as early as 1914 he endeavoured to change the singing of 'Just as I am' to the tune by William Bradbury.[87] However, judging by the return of the more familiar evangelical hymns to the music lists in 1915, it suggests that TTN realised that a vast amount of education and slow-going (as Stainer advised at York) was required. There was, however, an unusual amount of hymnody by E. G. Monk, which TTN would have known from his time in York. Of the Monk hymns, the one hymn that he tried to integrate as a staple was 'Angel Voices ever singing' (to the magnificent tune ANGEL VOICES) which is all but forgotten in American church music of today.[88] TTN also attempted to exchange the American tune CAROL for the Sullivan tune NOEL for the text 'It came upon the midnight Clear.'[89] This was met with much resistance and after Christmas 1917, the American tune returned to stay. TTN later recalled his confrontation with this unfamiliar tradition of hymnody:

[87] This hymntune and text was very popular among Baptists and evangelicals in the southern United States. The American Evangelist, Billy Graham (b. 1918), adopted this hymn as the theme-song of his international crusades, where he attempted to convert large numbers of individuals to personal relationships with God.

> There were some very poor hymn tunes used in the services. Many of these were disliked by Dr Stires, one in particular to the words 'Jesu, lover of my soul'. One Sunday morning when this was sung, I so disguised the tune with my own harmonies that after the service a member of the congregation asked my Rector to persuade that young man from York Minster not to play so many wrong notes. Dr Stire's reply was that if Mr. Noble was unable to play the tune the best thing to do was not to have it again. We didn't. By degrees I got rid of many sloppy hymn tunes and the congregation slowly adapted itself to a higher standard of hymnology.[90]

An evaluation of the music lists confirms that TTN realised that his intentions of improving the hymnody was not a battle to be fought – instead, he learned to utilise and promote the militant and personalised 'Jesus is mine' texts to his advantage, which acted as a convenient diversion from the drastic changes that occurred to the choral repertoire and psalmody.

STC's weekly prescription of psalms was not in keeping with the fixed rota in the BCP, rather it was a 'house' conglomeration of psalms titled The Cathedral Psalter. TTN was annoyed by this from his first day in post and sought to make the proper corrections as quickly as possible.[91] Upon his return in October of 1913, following a four-month holiday in England, TTN made several additions to the repertoire, including his own 'Souls of the Righteous' and 'Te Deum in B minor.' For the first evensong on 5 October, the Cathedral Psalter was replaced by the singing of the proper evening psalms as was set forth in the BCP. He likely incorporated a modified version of the pointing and chants from the York Psalter.[92]

[91] TTN's first day was 3 May 1913. The choir sang Harwood's Evening Canticles in A flat major (see music lists).
[92] There is no surviving evidence to confirm the origins of the psalmody, except for the odd mention of chants by Camidge, Monk, and Naylor. It is highly unlikely that these chants would have already been a part of American psalmody at the time. TTN mentions the new addition of Souls of the

As STC was not an English Cathedral, and with no strong tradition of English choral worship having been established in America, TTN was faced with how to train and encourage the choir in the singing of canticles and mass settings without congregational participation (since, at STC, people had been accustomed to these being sung to congregational chants). The challenge was finding a balance between 'choir only' and 'choir and congregation' settings as not to upset those looking to detect anything too Roman or un-American. From 1913-1919, TTN settled on a predictable pattern of singing choral settings of morning prayer canticles and mass settings on the first Sunday of every month. The subsequent Sundays contained a mixture of both 'choir only' and congregational settings, although the morning prayer canticles were more often sung by the choir alone.[93] TTN turned to the music of his mentor, Stanford, as the model for appropriate choral canticle settings. The B flat morning and evening services were the most sung during the early years, often many times each month, and sometimes every week.[94] Other settings were added, but carefully, and they were often surrounded by familiar anthems and other repeated items. TTN was also aware that the absence of a choir school only exacerbated the repetitious and limited repertoire, due to the unavailability of the boys for rehearsals. He remarked:

> The idea of a school had been in the thoughts of the Rector and Vestry ever since I had decided to come to New York in January 1913. At that time I had made it clear that a Choir School was necessary if the highest standards of singing were to be attained. But the war interfered and for some time we had to postpone this venture, interesting our choirboys as best we could in their work, and paying them for their services as choristers. This did not prove a very satisfactory procedure for we never had enough choir rehearsals during the week to maintain the high standard of singing for which I have always worked.[95]

Although TTN was agitated, even frustrated, by the situation, a positive result came in his inspiration to develop ways of increasing the repertoire and [94] Stanford's morning and evening services were sung 90 times from 1913-1918, in Sunday services only. The only composer with a higher count was TTN, himself, totalling 167 (see music lists).

quality of music, without the 'comforts' he had known in England. The genre of oratorio helped to play a major role, yielding a strong sense of accomplishment for the choir. He sought shorter choruses, particularly from Mendelsson's Elijah, that involved solos and quartets, with minimal choir participation.[96] Mendelssohn became more and more a centre of the repertoire, making up the second highest percentage of music sung by one composer from 1913 to 1943.[97]

TTN's craft as a composer was an additional characteristic of his position at STC. Possessing the ability to write one's own music, specifically designed for the forces at hand, made for the perfect solution in difficult or limiting situations. TTN's liturgical compositions are comprehensive, using the services set forth by the BCP as inspiration (or necessity). Ironically, more than one-half of his choral compositions were published in the years before his 1913 departure for New York.[98] TTN's largest collection, Opus No 8, contains twelve unaccompanied anthems, mostly based on texts selected by his father-in-law.[99] This set is divided into two groups: the first seven anthems published in 1909 by G. Schirmer of New York; the remaining five, published by Banks Music of York in various years.

The first seven anthems contain some of his most performed works during his years at STC. 'Souls of the Righteous' 37 times; 'I will lay me down in peace', three times; O hearken Thou unto the voice of my calling' not performed at STC; 'O wisdom, Spirit of the Holy God', 12 times; 'Fierce was the wild billow', 54 times; 'Come, O thou traveller', 21 times; and 'Hail, Gladdening Light' not performed at STC. His only other composition with a higher performance total in New York was his 'Te Deum' in b minor with 111 performances. (The Magnificat in b minor received 52 performances).[100]

The fact that such a number of his compositions were published before 1913 would suggest that his music had been a staple among the repertoire in York; in fact, though, very few of his works were performed at the Minster, likely due to the clergy oversight in construction of the music lists, and the surrounding politics.[101]

TTN's conservatism, as mentioned in the introduction, is evidenced by the style in which he composed.[102] His compositional language was, no doubt, largely influenced by his studies at the RCM and the ethos encouraged by Stanford.[103] Clear (but not always interesting) melodic lines, accompanied by strict part-writing in the lower voices and organ accompaniment were the basis of TTN's works; as was straightforward, English language text-underlay. Stanford spoke of the importance of these particulars, specifically at a time when newer and the soon-to-come English harmonic language of composers such as Howells and Vaughan Williams were on the horizon:

> It must not be imagined for a moment that the cult of colour and the neglect of invention is carrying all before it in the country. In the perhaps exceptional outlook upon the younger and coming men which I have been privileged to possess, I have not noticed any predilections for it in sound and really artistic temperaments. The "wild men" have generally been those who disliked the necessity of learning their letters before they could read, and preferred to write before they could spell. But they are and always have been in the minority. Most of them find wisdom by eating their bread with tears. All of them are the better for suffering, through aural experience, from their own shortcomings, than from dogmatic tutoring and misapplication of the terms "right" and "wrong."…The main consideration in the upbringing of young students, is, I am convinced, the destruction of any Index Expurgatorius. If the fruit is forbidden, they will eat it in secret, and probably before they give the wholesomer kinds a fair trial. I always recommend to them a variant of an old adage, "Say your prayers and keep your ear open."[104]

This conservative stock, in which TTN was steeped, forged a verbal and musical tone that he used as his battle cry for good music.[105]

However, it seems to have been more of a hindrance than an affirmation of newer music and promotion of avant garde composers.

A selection of TTN's anthems, which looked more to the past than the future, written during the STC years, took predominance in the music lists:

A fire-mist and a planet (unpublished); Everywhere, Everywhere, Christmas tonight (1938 Galaxy); Gloria Domini (G. Schirmer 1912, performed by the Festival Chorus in 1915); Glory to God (Banks, nd); Go to dark Gethsemane (1910 H. W. Gray); Grieve not the Holy Spirit (1915 Novello); Lord of the worlds above (1940 Galaxy); O Master, let me walk with thee (1925 Schmidt); Rejoice Today (1914 H. W. Gray); Rise up, O Men of God (1925 Schmidt).[106]

Even though his compositions out-numbered those of the great masters by a ratio of almost 3:1, TTN found a certain security by retaining the music of the previous generations. There is, however, a conspicuous absence of Bach; namely the passions and smaller works, including the Magnificat.

The higher number of repetitions found in TTN's service music is likely due to the fact it was easier to repeat, without boredom or too much detection from the congregation. The morning and evening services most frequently used were the B and A minor services; for communion, there was more congregation chants used, however the A major communion service (nd, published by Banks) was used with more regularity than TTN's D major, E major, F major (1908) b minor (1930), f-sharp minor, and g minor (1913) services.[107]

Even though TTN was not under the liturgical supervision of a cathedral precentor, he was still under the authority of the priest-in-charge: the rector. TTN mentioned in his early days at STC that EMS adored the music of Gounod, and that in order to appease him, much of Gounod's music found its way into the repertoire, much to TTN's dislike.[108] From 1925, following EMS's departure from STC, the quantity of Gounod's anthems was greatly reduced.

[108] See ch. 3, p. 63.

From this point (1925), it should be noted that TTN was ignored a large quantity of English repertoire that was becoming a mainstay in the cathedral music world. For instance, the music of Vaughan Williams, Bairstow, Gardiner, Holst, and Ireland were largely absent, until after Roelif Brooks became rector of STC. The conclusion could be drawn that Brooks (who, in his previous establishment, also had an English organist-choirmaster), might have known of the more current repertoire and encouraged (or required) TTN to include more modern music in the STC canon. Several anthems are of note: Bairstow 'Sing ye to the Lord (1911),' was first performed in 1935, and not repeated; Gardiner 'Evening Hymn (1908),' appeared in 1941, and was sung only twice; Holst 'Turn back O man (1916),' was sung in 1926 and repeated over 20 times; Ireland 'Greater Love (1912),' was sung on Remembrance Sunday in 1927 and never repeated. TTN likely sang many of these pieces by request or out of curiosity, and once fulfilled, he chose not to repeat them; all the while, his own music was sung more and more.

A unique anthem, performed only once in 1929, was a setting of 'Balulalow' by Philip Heseltine, also known as Peter Warlock.[109] This one-off performance at STC is rather a mystery; composed in 1919, it is the only piece TTN performed that contained a harmonic language of the new world of English composers. Perhaps Warlock had visited NYC and met TTN, or the piece was sent to TTN from England.

Another facet of TTN's compositions that coloured the liturgies of STC was his hymnody. TTN published 13 hymn-tunes during his lifetime, although many more were composed and used at STC.[110] His only surviving hymntune in the Episcopal Hymnal 1982 is ORA LABORA (1918), set to the text 'Come, Labour On,' written by the Scottish poet, Jane Laurie Borthwick (1813-1897). TTN wrote this tune as the choir school was set to open, the school adopting this as their 'theme-song.'[111]

As EMS became more acquainted with TTN's abilities and his vision for the liturgy and music of STC, he sought any possible way publically to display his support. On 25 January 1914 he intoned the service of evensong, which was very likely the first time in the history of STC that a priest sang any part of the liturgy.[112] A personal musical request by EMS for evensong, to heighten the sense of drama following his sermon, was a vesper hymn. The hymn was sung by the choir alone, and usually consisted of the final chorale from Samuel Sebastian Wesley's extended anthem, 'Praise the Lord, O my Soul.'[113] The chorale, 'Lead me, Lord' was (and is) an iconic short anthem in America, but the larger context of its origin is unknown to most.

> Praise the Lord, O my soul' [was] written for the [Winchester] cathedral choir to sing at the opening of the new organ by Willis in Holy Trinity Church, Winchester, on 10 September 1861. Divided into four movements (of which the first two are the most substantial), it is typical of Wesley's late works in having profusion of musical ideas but little development…The final two short movements, the austerely harmonized chorale 'As for me' and the well-known 'Lead me Lord', are in fact so closely linked that the latter gains immeasurably from being heard in its intended context.[114]

EMS was forthright in his collegial communication with TTN about the structure of the services. Clear attention to the duration of the liturgies was important; most anthems were usually three to five minutes in length, with very few exceptions. The longest anthem sung during TTN's years, outside the context of a concert setting, was Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer.'[115] TTN was also self-critical of his selections (perhaps with input from EMS), by adding written remarks (after services) in the margins of the music lists, suggesting other choices (often his own compositions) or better ways of implementing liturgical choreographies, etc. Every musical liturgy of the church, including pastoral services of weddings and funerals, was documented; providing invaluable insight into the musical evolution of the choir as TTN built his programme.[116]

Even though TTN was making progress, the boys' sporadic attendance, owing to the public school schedule and travel from outlying areas was becoming crippling.[117] There were many instances of anthems scheduled being changed at the last minute due to the fact that only four boys came to the Thursday evening practice.[118] The choir's only public responsibility was on Sunday for Holy Communion or Morning Prayer at 11 a.m. and Evensong with Address at 5 p.m. There was also the occasional funeral or wedding requiring a small ensemble, or, depending upon the social importance of the subject, the resources of the full choir were demanded. Many funerals were held in the residences of the deceased with members of the choir and DRP or TTN providing music.[119] They very rarely sang anthems; instead they provided one or two hymns, the burial psalm, Psalm 39 sung to a chant by William Richard Bexfield, followed by the funeral sentence from the hymnal- 'I heard a voice.'[120]

Most of the solo singing in the Sunday services and incidental events was done by the renowned tenor soloist, Reed Miller (1880-1923). Miller had been hired in 1912 by WM and was particularly noted for his beautiful voice and talent as a musician.[121] During the first few years of TTN's tenure, Miller bore much of the weight of solo singing in the choir; TTN often planned anthems that specifically featured his voice and not that of the choir. In this regard, TTN made use of a tradition that had its roots in the past when the soloist had effectively masked the poor quality of choral singing. There was the significant precedent of the Chapel Royal in the post-Restoration period of the 1660s with the verse anthem - a work in which a considerable proportion was sung by a soloist(s), with the choir commenting occasionally, often in homophonic and predictable patterns. Such a practice continued throughout the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries in English cathedrals when the choirs were often small, dissolute and barely rehearsed. In such an atmosphere, the verse anthem inadvertently served a positive purpose in a tradition that had markedly declined. That John Stainer as a chorister in the 1840s witnessed this predicament of decay only serves to accentuate the poverty of singing and boys' training.[122] While some considerable improvement occurred in the Church of England after 1870, when the verse anthem experienced a notable decline, in the United States, dependence on solo singers was still required which rendered the culture of the solo singer as more significant and predominant. The men of STC and other New York churches, in their need to secure further employment, often sang in the reformed Jewish synagogues. Here they experienced the grand style of singing in religious services, particularly in the style of the Chazzanut, or Jewish Cantor. This operatic style was very popular and made the province of Jewish music seem far less remote from the domain of Christian worship. Indeed, the cross-over between temples in Manhattan and church choirs was conspicuous.

3.9 Summer Camp

By the summer of 1914, it was decided by TTN and DRP that something must be done to achieve immediate results in the improvement of the boys' voices. It was determined that a summer camp could be run for two weeks and at a total cost of [122] Jeremy Dibble, John Stainer: A life in Music (Woodbridge: The Boydell Press, 2007) p. 8 passim.

$750.22, the expense of which was heartily approved by the music committee and the vestry.[123] While the two musicians of STC were waging artistic war on the boys during summer camp, the world was also entering into a conflict that would become the First World War. The camp of 1914, held at the Parish Summer home in East Marion on Long Island, was filled with daily activities ranging from whistling morning prayer to moonlight swimming in the nearby lake.[124] It was a time of team building and camaraderie for the thirty boys, for TTN knew from his past experiences that, in order to achieve the greatest possible results, everyone must know how to work together in every situation.[125] The daily schedule included a ten-minute period for 'tone practice' which seemed inadequate, but DRP and TTN knew that if the boys learned to work together in all their other sporting activities and games, that singing would come naturally. This was, in effect, the realisation of that Edwardian ideal of healthiness in mind and body. The daily schedule included a regime more in keeping with a boy-scout camp:

On Sunday, during the camp, the boys offered their voices to morning liturgy at the Church of the Holy Trinity, Greenport. They sang familiar Morning Prayer chants with the congregation, as well as 'Let the Bright Seraphim' from Samson by Handel, sung by all the boys in unison with violin obbligato.[127]

Upon returning to Manhattan, the boys and their directors had a renewed energy for the difficult year ahead. The years of 1914 and 1915 were two of the most productive years for the choir, before the choir school was founded in 1919. TTN remarked:

> The "raw recruits" of a year ago are now fairly good choristers, they are steadily improving in tone quality and musicianship, and they are willing and enthusiastic workers. The gentleman of the choir do splendid work, and are most enthusiastic in the practice-room, as well as during service. The boys had a great time at the Summer Home, and a word of very real thanks should be awarded the Vestry for giving them such a treat.[128]

Owing to the extra time with the boys at camp and their acquiring of more serviceable skills, a large amount of new repertoire was added during this year as TTN explained in his contribution to the PYB: 'A large amount of new music has been added to the library, and the following list of anthems and services given for the first time… may interest many members of the congregation.'[129] The amount of new music learned was self-evident:

> Communion Services: Noble in A; Stanford in B flat. Te Deums: Bennett in E flat; Bennett in B flat; Best in A minor; Noble in B minor; Best in G. Jubilates: Bennett in E flat; Bennett in B flat; Best in A; Noble in B minor; Smart in F. Benedicites: Best in C; Stewart in F. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis: Noble in A minor; Noble in B minor; Noble in G minor; Stainer in B flat; Walmisley in D minor. Anthems: The Lord is Great in Sion, Best; How Lovely is Thy Dwelling place, Brahms; Lo, Star-led Chiefs, Crotch; In Humble Faith and Holy Love, Garrett; Zion's Ways do Languish, Gounod; Sing Praises Unto the Lord, Gounod; Surely, He Hath Borne Our Griefs, Handel; Since By Man, Handel; Behold, the Lamb of God, Handel; Worthy is the Lamb, Handel; Achieved is the Glorious Work, Haydn; In the Beginning God Created, Haydn; The Heavens are Telling, Haydn; Why Seek Ye the Living Among the Dead? Hopkins; How lovely are the Messengers, Mendelssohn; Happy and Blest are they, Mendelssohn; Cast Thy Burden, Mendelssohn; Sleepers, Wake, Mendelssohn; Rejoice To-day with One Accod, Noble; Fierce was the Wild Billow, Noble; And Every Creature, Spohr; Blessing and Honour, Spohr. Berwald's Cantata, "The Seven Last Words of Christ," was given its first performance on Palm Sunday.[130]

The immediacy in results TTN was able to achieve is astounding, it most surely a testament to his great skill and experience. He was creating a repertoire list for the boys and men, that would in turn create a tradition, in the Anglican vein, and in time, yield long-term results and permanent changes. Ironically, though, as much as TTN believed himself a moderniser by introducing STC to vast amounts of repertoire, he was, in many respects a conservative, repeating older music lists he developed in York and Ely. There was also a conspicuous absence of many 'up-and-coming' composers; an identifying action that points to TTN's preference for music by the older generations.[131]

The summer camp continued until 1919, by which time the choir school was taking shape. The subsequent years of the camp from 1914 seemed to contain less and less singing and more 'boy' activities and bonding time. DRP possessed quite a flair for organizing activities and was highly persuasive and successful in recruiting and dealing with skeptical parents. For the summer of 1917, DPR drafted a handwritten letter stating:

June 30, 1917

To the Parents of the Choristers:

The Choir will hold its annual outing to Big Indian, Ulster County, N.Y.; from Monday, August 6 to Saturday August 25th, reporting at the Church Sunday morning at 930 for rehearsal and service.

The boys sleep in tents erected upon board floors, and on standard cots. The food is plain, but plentiful and wholesome. The drinking water is said to be the best in the State. Mr. Noble, the Rev. Mr. Caswell, and I will be in personal charge of the expedition, and will be fully responsible.

Full particulars will be given to the boys, upon receipt of parents' written consent. May I hear from you on or before July the seventh?

Faithfully yours,
Daniel R. Philippi

[131] See Appendix. TTN relied on the repertoire of the older masters that he knew from his time in England. New music of Howells, Vaughan Williams, Walton, etc. is absent. Other than a few now forgotten American 'war-horse' anthems, the vast majority of newly composed music that was introduced from 1913-1943 was TTN's own compositions.
[132] Camp Journal, p. 59.

TTN left most of the camp responsibilities to DRP and Mr Caswell (Assistant rector), but would make appearances at opportune times and offer a 'celebrity-like' time with the boys. TTN loved being the father-figure in the lives of these children - so much so that his relationship with his own son, Philip, began to suffer.[133]

3.10 The Festival Chorus

Akin to his time in Ely and York, Noble (having more free-time than before) also sought a way to involve the parish in music making, other than becoming ardent supporters of the choir. In 1914, with the permission of the music committee, he formed the Festival Chorus. The chorus consisted of some one hundred singers, which combined with the men and boys' voices to produce a large and impressive array of sound.[134] The choir rehearsed in the Parish House on Wednesday evenings at 8pm, providing TTN with a musical rehearsal every day of the week except Monday and Saturday- a schedule certainly more like what he had been accustomed to in the past.[135] The Festival Chorus had a very successful start and ran from 1914 until 1918, when the chorus was disbanded due to the large numbers of men being called up for service in the war, and struggling finances.[136] The symphonic chorus performed many great master works to capacity audiences and generated a great love of orchestral music within the parish. It is quite possible that TTN's reason for this group had motives other than musical ones. By exposing large groups of people to excellent music and by inviting city members and friends of wealthy and influential parishioners into the church, the choir gained exposure that proved helpful in raising money for the future choir school and other musical activities.[137]

[137] TTN used the Festival Chorus and the STC choir combined with the choir from the Cathedral of St John the Divine to present Elgar's Dream of Gernontius, which gained a level of exposure that normal Sunday services would never have achieved (see Appendix, 20 March 1918).

The grand building on Fifth Avenue, coupled with the stunning new organ, built by Ernest M. Skinner at cost of $25,000 provided much satisfaction for TTN.[138] When it was agreed upon that he would leave York and move to New York, the music committee put TTN in touch with Skinner, and he immediately made changes to the organ specification, yielding a more English result for the new church. The organ, opus 205, consisted of four manuals, divided into great, swell, choir, solo divisions.[139] It was also rumored to have included the builder's first 32' Sub-Bass stop; in reality, the bottom octave of the 32' Diapason was stopped.[140]

3.11 Need for a Choir School.

As the choir of men and boys continued to improve, in some ways, the musical situation of the church grew worse. Despite continuing summer camps as training tools for the boys, the situation of having adequate time for training the boys was not remedied. There was but one solution. TTN, upon total frustration with the 'situation' began to remark publicly in the parish reports that:

> I feel it is necessary to bring before the members of St Thomes Church's congregation the very great difficulties we have to face with regard to the boys of the Choir. It is impossible to appoint a time for rehearsals to suit all, owing to work in the schools. Some of the boys are able to attend but one rehearsal a week, the full rehearsal on Friday night. Only those behind the scenes know what our difficulties are, and I often marvel at the results obtained, in view of the small number who attend the rehearsals at the same time.
>
> There is but one solution to this problem, - a choir School. May I hope and trust that this will very soon be an accomplished fact? It is now nearly four years that I have had the privilege of being your Organist and Choirmaster. My work is a great joy to me, and my faithful and loyal Assistant, Daniel Philippi is never tired of doing his share of the work and is in a very way a great help. A great many of the older boys have left, their voices having changed, and others are filling their places with considerable success. Several boys have done really excellent solo work; others are showing great promise in this side of the work. With a Choir School, many a boy with a good voice, but without much of this world's goods, might be greatly assisted to make good during his boyhood and be trained in the right direction to make him a good citizen, and so to face the great and pressing problems of city life.[141]

TTN again wrote in 1917:

[141] PYB 1916, pp. 47-48.

My report for 1916 was somewhat gloomy. Of necessity I must paint a much bleaker picture for the future; the boy problem becomes more and more acute, and unless we have a choir school very soon, our parishioners must not look for the high standard of them:

1. Boys with good voices rarely offer themselves, and when they do, they demand very high salaries.
2. Owing to the present school system, it is difficult to get them to rehearsals.
3. Some boys live as far away as West Brighton, S.I. [Staten Island], Jamaica, Yonkers and Elmhurst.
4. Highly trained boys leave without any real reason, the usual excuse being, school before church; six boys have left in this way since the summer of 1917!

Let us start this year with a fund to found and endow a choir school. Surely this great parish, in the heart of one of the greatest cities in the world, should be able to have its own School. The advantages would be enormous to the Church, the boys, and the City. Mr. Philippi, my faithful assistant has again given of his best and has been a real help-mate.[142]

The frustration articulated by TTN was palpable. It seems absolutely astounding that he would write directly to the parish, particularly after America had entered into war with Germany on 6 April 1917, and solicit money for the founding of a choir school. Up until this point, the rector and music committee had remained publicly silent, except for remarks in the vestry minutes reporting on the 'problem.' It is also assumed that many closed-door conversations took place, but none so bold or public as was about to occur. By April of 1918, Charles Steele reported for the music committee that the choir was grossly underpaid for their services and that if they are to stand by Mr. Noble, the vestry must increase their pay.[143] This the vestry did, increasing the total music allowance to $1000 a month - amounting to $15,000 in today's market.[144] The vestry, in the same meeting, also discussed the overall feasibility of a choir school. The minutes from April 1918 stated:

…the Rector then brought up the subject of the formation of a choir school, citing as a basis for argument that it is becoming more and more difficult to obtain boys with good voices. As soon as a boy is found and trained, he is often called away by his parents on the ground that he spends too much time in rehearsals, etc. After discussion it was moved and seconded that the Rector and the Music Committee carefully investigate the question and if found feasible, endeavor to form such a school by in-listing the cooperation of say thirty parishioners who would pay say $500 a year for five years toward the establishment of such a school, the vestry to become responsible for the payment of say three to four thousand dollars per year for the rental of a suitable building.[145]

[144] VM, April 1918, p. 221
[145] VM, April 1918, pp. 221-222.

Thus the campaign began. TTN had no way of knowing how his legacy would be viewed or preserved, particularly in modern day America, but history has been kind with terms of endearment and reverence. However, an opinion may certainly be that he crossed the line with his timing and insistence upon winning the battle for a choir school. Looking back to his training as an organist and ipso facto, a gentleman, TTN was moulded by very difficult and self-absorbed men (especially Stanford), solidifying a will and tactical approach to winning.

EMS's words in the yearbook of 1916, four months before America entered the first World War, cast a level of irony on TTN's fight for the choir school; although totally unrelated and three years prior to the opening of the school, the words leave a taste of self-important grandeur that was to be thrown-back in the faces of TTN, Steele and EMS when the appeal for funds was sent forth.

> These are days of tremendous import; we feel the shock of contending armies, the impact of opposing principles. Many persons are confused, doubtful or despairing. There is no reason or excuse for discouragement. Selfishness is condemned, sacrifice exalted. Cruelty is abhorred, mercy beloved. The flesh is restrained, the soul re-born. Caesar is discredited; the world is listening to Christ.[146]

CHAPTER FOUR

A Choir School, 1919-1936

4.1 Prospect of a Choir School

The idea of a choir school at STC was met with positive and negative reviews, both sides of which carried much emotional fervour. The timing of the launch of the school, at what we now know was the end of the First World War, also created tensions. TTN and EMS worked very hard to convince the people of the vestry and the music committee that this was the time to proceed with raising funds. TTN's relationships with the music committee and the rector were solidified; in particular, Charles Steele and TTN often met at Steele's office on Wall Street where they would discuss at length the importance of funding such an endeavour:

> Sometimes, at his suggestion, I would go down to his office on Wall Street, where we would have chats about the choir, the Choir School, and the music of the church after which he would invite me to an excellent luncheon in the private dining-room of the firm of Pierpont Morgan & Company, the firm Mr. Steele served as chief counsel.[1]

TTN's strategy for educating the congregation about the choir school was like so many of his initiatives: he created relationships that invited conversations. Even though the foundation of a choir school had been an intrinsic aspect of the discussions of TTN's interview early in 1913, it was an ambitious task that could only be fulfilled through mutual agreement, hard work and determination, alongside the exploitation of his resourcefulness and adroit inter-personal skills.

The issue for the parishioners of STC was not in the perpetuation of a men-and-boys choir (unlike Grace Church and the 'Quartet'), but for some parishioners, the provision of a choir school to house and educate the boys was perceived to be an unnecessary extravagance. Why was it necessary to take on the responsibility of the boys' daily lives when they already had what was deemed fashionable in the

[1] T. Tertius Noble, Memoirs, ch. 7, p. 10 (MS US-STC).

Episcopal Church - a choir of men and boys? The reasoning presented (as stated earlier) by TTN and the church was to achieve a level of excellence and create a standard of worship worthy of such a place as STC. However, for everyone (other than TTN) the English cathedral ethos was more a selling point of taste, rather than of function.

The argument (from a current view) at this juncture becomes unclear, as the conflicting material found in reference to other church music programmes in the city is inconsistent, and in some cases, merely anecdotal or, at worst, myth. Did TTN want a school for his own personal satisfaction, or to compete with other churches? Was it as simple as a matter of promoting quality and good taste? Perhaps this was the only way he knew how to function inside the church music system. His time in parish churches, leading up to Ely, would argue otherwise.[2]

By the 1900s, the Cathedral of St. John the Divine operated a boarding choir school for its boy choristers.[3] It is debatable whether Grace Church ever possessed a boarding school for its choirboys (to be explained further in the chapter), due to sources of conflicting nature.[4] Trinity Wall Street, whilst having a men-and-boys choir, never operated a boarding school for the choristers' education.

John Ogasapian's book, Church Music in America mentions those early days in NYC:

> The newly begun Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York established its choir of men and boys and was complete in 1901. Eight years later, it moved to put the school on a firm footing by hiring Miles Farrow (1871-1953). T. Tertius Noble (1867-1953) was recruited from York Minster in 1913 to establish a men-and-boys' choir at St. Thomas Church in New York, and the school there was opened in 1919.[5]

The facts surrounding the opening of STC's choir school are inaccurately recorded by Ogasapian: while he is correct in stating that the school opened in 1919, the men-and-boys' choir was not, in fact, established by TTN but by George Warren and William C. Macfarlane (see Introduction).

4.2 Strategy for fundraising

With finances being the chief hurdle for TTN and STC, he sought ways to raise funds in other, less conventional, ways. By widening his musical audience, through initiatives such as the establishment of the Festival Chorus, he was able to form and educate a larger and more influential constituency than that of a typical group of musical enthusiasts or average parishioners. He then placed wealthy and influential members of New York society on the board of the chorus, thereby creating an automatic relationship with this particular clientèle, so that when the time came to raise large amounts of money, there was a base, shaped by him, upon which to draw. Among the names found on the committee were Cornelius Vanderbilt, Charles Steele, Robert Dodson and William Truesdale - the latter three holding the top senior chairs on the vestry and comprising the church's music committee. Also included were MSN and Mrs Ernest M. Stires.[6] In ingratiating himself with these people, especially those of wealth (and in this regard he took 'requests' for favourite hymns and anthems), he was able to secure support and influence for his grand project. Moreover, with society mingling with society, or more directly, money mingling with money, word of mouth made for an excellent way to spread news of such a unique and exclusive initiative as a boarding school for choir boys.

By May of 1918, TTN and EMS came up with the idea of a private solicitous letter. It was with the approval of the music committee that the letter was sent out to thirty influential families especially targeted for their potential to sponsor

[6] PYBs, 1913-1920. The women of the committee performed a unique role by drawing upon the base of well-to-do housewives, looking for their next charitable organization to aid. scholarships for the new choir school. The following is the letter, this particular one having been addressed to Mrs Elliot:

May 30th 1918

Dear [Mrs. E.V. Elliot],

For some time past we have experienced great difficulty in obtaining and keeping desirable boys for the Choir. It is practically impossible to train boys to sing well in a choir unless there be a centre such as a choir school for tuition and constant supervision. Some such arrangement has become absolutely essential for Saint Thomas's if the music is to be maintained at a standard worthy of the Church and its Choir Master. Realizing this necessity, the Vestry have determined to establish a choir school, under a plan which has been devised by the Rector with the advice and assistance of Mr. Noble.

The plan is briefly as follows:

A building is to be rented suitable for a boarding school where at least thirty boys can be taken care of. The school will be under the immediate charge of Mr. Noble who will be assisted by competent masters in the ordinary branches of scholastic education.

The total cost for boarding, tuition and musical training has been carefully estimated at $500 a year for each boy. To provide this money it is proposed to ask thirty of our parishioners to become patrons of the choir school and to agree each to give $500 a year, for five years if possible, to take on one boy in the school.

Patrons will be invited to act as members of a choir school committee and to advise concerning the formation and maintenance of the school. They will not be called upon for any further financial aid beyond their first pledge. For such patrons the names of thirty parishioners have been selected by the Rector and the Music Committee, and this letter is sent only to them.

We are very hopeful that the opportunity of educating a boy during the most crucial period of his life under such favorable circumstances besides the great advantage to be obtained for the Church music will appeal to these parishioners and that the invitation will be promptly accepted. The plan has been the result of much anxious thought on the part of the Rector and he is most solicitous for its success.

In view of his early departure for France we have decided to send out this letter at once in the hope that a favorable response may be promptly received before the Rector's departure to work among our lads at the front, so that he may sail with the knowledge that the success of the plan has been assured.

Will you please therefore let us hear from you no later than June 10th, 1918.

A form of pledge is enclosed on which you may indicate your willingness to become a patron for any period from one to five years.

Please reply directly to the Rector at the Church or to Mr. Steele at No. 23 Wall Street, New York.

Sincerely yours:
Charles Steele, W. H. Truesdale, R. B. Dodson[7]

The letter was clear in its instruction and contained what the committee thought was substantial reason for agreeing to fund the school. They found, however, that not everyone shared their enthusiasm. The results from the initial fund-raising attempt were less desirable than anticipated: fewer than half those canvassed responded.[8] There was talk amongst the committee of whether or not to continue the appeal or in what way to continue promoting the idea and solicitation of funds.[9] The written replies ranged from approval to irritation at the audacity of asking for money during such a crucial and straitened period following the outbreak of war, when many other worthy organizations demanded immediate financial support. One of the first responses came from Lancaster Morgan:

My dear Rector:

It gives me pleasure to accept the invitation to become one of the patrons of St. Thomas's Choir School and I enclose my cheque to your order for $500.00 in payment of my proportion for one year commencing September 1, 1918.

Circumstances permitting, it will be my pleasure to continue this contribution from year to year as indicated in your circular, but it would be my preference that this remain entirely voluntary on my part and not in fulfillment of a pledge.

I would regard it as a favor if you would instruct your secretary to notify me when I might see you for a few moments prior to your sailing.

With kindest regards, I am,
Yours faithfully,

Lancaster Morgan.[10]

Another response, declining:

The appeal letter was emotionally charged and a personal letter from the rector, himself, petitioning for funds, was intended to bring moral pressure to bear on those who could afford to donate considerable sums of money. Internal written communications between members of the music committee and handwritten ledgers tracking the progress of the pledges also read with an air of uncertainty and doubt at the approach taken. The launch of the choir school was far less romantic than one might have assumed on the basis of years of oral tradition. That the money came pouring in and all manner of things were well was not the case.

The return response form, allocated to the potential donors, did not allow space for additional comments, rather there was one space provided for a personalized answer (how many boys would you support). Those who were unable to respond positively to the rector's entreaties were forced to reply to him directly under separate cover, which was intended to make it all the more difficult to do so. The return form stated:

I hereby accept the invitation to become a patron of St. Thomas's Choir School as proposed in the letter of the Music Committee, dated May 30th 1918, and I hereby agree to pay for the support and education of one boy for _____, the sum of $500 a year, on or before September first in each year.[13]

The written response that placed the greatest scrutiny on the enterprise arrived in late June. Each member of the committee (and vestry) was called into question and faced with examining their motives for advancing the cause of a choir school.

Music Committee, Dear Sirs,

[12] Letter from William A. Clark to Charles Steele, 4 November 1918 (MS US-STCcs).
[13] Copy of original return form (MS US-STCcs).

Your letter of June 25th has been received, requesting an answer to your for-seen communications in reading the first appeal I was inclined to express surprise that the Church contemplated such an enterprise at this critical time.

However in thinking the matter over, I concluded that unless one or more musical enthusiasts among the members of the vestry had already guaranteed the financing of a Choir School, such a proposition would never have come from any church organization in this hour of national peril.

To my mind the idea of the laying out of thousands of dollars in an unnecessary experiment, in war-time, is distinctly out of place!

Very sincerely yours,
E. Mitchell Ferriday[14]

Following Ferriday's letter, private personal correspondence began between Truesdale and Dodson. Dodson was the first to communicate directly with Steele on 4 July:

My dear Mr. Steele,

Doctor Stires expects to be on the water a week from today and wishes to have as much done as possible, meantime, for the foundation of a Choir School. You have a form of a letter proposed to be written.

Will you learn just how Mr. Truesdale feels about sending out a further appeal at this time?

How far is Mr. Ferriday right in his severe (but able) letter on the subject?

(I called upon you Tuesday, but you were engaged)

Sincerely yours,
R. B. Dodson[15]

After this, and further logistical communications between the committee, Truesdale sent a lengthy letter to Steele (see p. 92). Steele was of strong mind, but perhaps this began to wear on him, potentially to the point where he felt like he must act heroically to ensure that EMS's and TTN's dream was realised. Steele was undoubtedly as emotionally and financially committed as others on the committee.

Before Truesdale's letter was received by Steele, the Rector sent a letter to reassure him that project was now under way:

[14] Letter from E. Mitchell Ferriday to Music Committee, 27 June 1918 (MS US-STCcs). Also handwritten on the letter: 'Read by Mr. Dodson, July 1, not acknowledged by him. He thinks that the Rector should see the letter.'

[15] Letter from Dodson to Steele, 4 July 1918 (MS US-STCcs). The music committee was naturally anxious (on the rector's behalf) to complete this project with as little drama as possible. EMS was preparing to leave the country for the summer months, and the urgency to raise the funds was only compounded by his travel plans.

July 17th, 1918

My dear Mr. Steele,

I have written to thank Mr. Adams for his promise to be one of the patrons of our Choir School. Although I regret the doubts of Mr. Ferriday and Mr. Ferry yet I think we are justified in pushing ahead with our undertaking.

Mrs. Stires and Mrs. Elliot are quite well acquainted with the possibilities of other names on our list and I know they will gladly furnish another thirty. We did fully as well with the first thirty as I expected.

Herewith I am enclosing a little note to you, a copy of which might be sent, if you think best, to the names on our next list. I am expecting to sail within a few hours. You may have a quiet mind concerning affairs at the Church. They are in capable hands and I know that in any emergency you will advise and help.

May God's blessing be with you and your dear ones.

Ever affectionately yours,
Ernest M. Stires.[16]

Truesdale's letter, received by Steele, commenting on EMS's strategy:

30 West Street, NY
Personal
July 31, 1918

My dear Mr. Steele—

I am in receipt of your letter of the 30th advising me that fifteen favorable replies have been received to the joint letter that was sent out some weeks ago requesting certain of St. Thomas's parishioners to become patrons of the proposed Choir School, that four or five of the parties to whom the letters were sent have not been heard from at all and the rest have declined.

I note that Doctor Stires before he left for Europe wrote you saying he hoped we would later send out additional letters and endeavor to get the full thirty subscriptions.

I think I am one of the several you mention who have not made any response to this letter. I will do so now, however, and state that I will be willing to be one of the thirty to subscribe the sum asked for to establish this school.

With reference to sending out the additional letters now, I am inclined to agree with Mr. Dodson and yourself that, for the reasons you state, the present is not an opportune time to do this. I should think it better be postponed until about the middle of September.

Replying to your inquiry as to how I feel about the matter: Frankly speaking, I have not been very enthusiastic about undertaking this enterprise just at the present time, when as many heavy demands are being made upon people for subscriptions to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A. and for Liberty Loan Bonds. Furthermore, as I understood the matter, when this subject was brought up for consideration, it was very strongly urged that we establish this school in order to put St. Thomas's, so far as its music was concerned, on a footing more nearly equal that feature the service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and Grace Church. In other words, it was strongly urged that in this way St. Thomas's would be put on a basis where it could compete more favorably, as respects the character and attractiveness of the musical feature of its services, with the two churches named above; and I do not feel that it would be wise, just at this time, to make anything like that the basis of our proposed action.

As to the education of the boys in the choir, I agree with the Rector and yourself that this is a most important and worthy feature of the proposition; but as to this even, it does not seem to me especially urgent that we should undertake to do this for the St. Thomas choir boys just at the present time. However, it is quite possible my ideas on the subject may not be as broad as they should be, and I am willing, as stated above, to go along with the others in carrying out the project if it can be fully financed at this time; but I do not favor doing this unless we can get the full thirty subscriptions of $500 each.

I have read with interest Doctor Stires' note to you, and return it to you here-with. I am very glad indeed to know that he arrived safely on the other side, and concur in your view that he will do most excellent and valuable work over there.

I remain,
W. H. Truesdale

cc R. B. Dodson[17]

Truesdale was the first openly to acknowledge the complex nature of the committee's undertaking. Little was accomplished during the months of August and September by EMS and TTN, as they were both in Europe; this left the task of raising funds solely to the music committee. It is astonishing to read these highly personal and confidential letters; one does not know if the communication among members of the committee was open and transparent, or if these private and candid conversations were the only way in which doubts and concerns were actually voiced. All face-to-face communications could have very well been polite and passive. It is, in fact, this type of posturing and triangulation that created difficulty for TTN in his final days at the STC.

Steele kept meticulous records of all the replies, in the form of tables and ledgers that he shared with the other committee members. He even contacted contributors to ask for increased pledges, if he felt their gift was beneath their actual pecuniary abilities.[18] By October, half the funds had been raised, putting the committee and vestry in the position of having to decide whether or not to continue soliciting contributions or to suspend the entire project. It had already been determined that the venture would be 'all or nothing', leaving the committee to make the ultimate decision.[19] They produced a typed draft of a second letter to solicit the remaining funds. The tone of this letter was far more cautious than the initial appeal, due to the controversy created earlier in the summer. It clearly stated that the decision was to be made in good faith and was entirely a matter of personal conviction:

October 4, 1918

Mr dear Mr. Steele:-

A suitable house for the Choir School has been found at 45 West 53rd St.- four story and basement with four baths and one shower. House 20 feet wide. It belongs to Dr. Bailey and has recently been vacated by his tenant. The house is in good order and twenty boys could be put into it. The asking rental is $3500. A competent head master is known and his services could be procured from the first of January.

Of the fifteen actual subscribers, nine are pledged for the full period of five years. There have been twelve declinations, with three persons unheard from. To keep the matter of a further appeal going, I suggest the following to be dated the 28th of October:

"Dear Mr. and Mrs. _____

A few weeks before Dr. Stires went abroad, the question of establishing a Choir School for St. Thomas's Church, long under consideration, was formally acted upon by the Vestry. From fifteen immediate subscribers, one-half the pledges needed to establish and run the school for five years, were received. With the Summer vacation past and the Fourth Liberty Loan successfully taken, we venture to ask for your help in this undertaking.

Great difficulty has all along been experienced in obtaining and keeping desirable boys for the Choir. It is practically impossible to train boys to sing well unless there be a center, such as a Choir School, for tuition and constant supervision.

Some such arrangement has become absolutely essential for St. Thomas's if the music is to be maintained at a standard worthy of the Church and its Choir Master. We could not approve this undertaking under present conditions if we were not profoundly impressed with the need of prompt, intensive, moral and spiritual training in the education of our boys- the men of the future. The need for this has been vastly increased by the effects and the lessons of the Great War.

While the Services will be better and more spiritually rendered by a choir trained in proper surroundings, yet an infinitely greater value to the community would be the unusual equipment for the most important service furnished to the most promising boys we can find anywhere. We hope that no one will become a patron of the school whose subscription would subtract anything from the critical needs of the Nation and our splendid men at the front, and we write to you in confidence that you can do one without discriminating against, or taking from, the other.

A suitable building not far from the Church has been found in which thirty boys can be taken care-of. It is hoped to make a start by the first of January 1919. The School would be under the immediate charge of Mr. Noble, assisted by competent masters in the ordinary branches of scholastic education.

The total cost for boarding, tuition and musical training has been carefully estimated at $500.00 a year for each boy. To provide part of the balance required, we respectfully ask that you will become a patron of the Choir School, contributing $500.00 a year, (if possible, for five years) to take care of one boy.

[19] See letter, p. 92. The committee, authority given by the Rector, was charged with the ultimate power of launching the choir school. If it was unsuccessful, they would be to blame, rather than EMS or TTN.

Patrons will be invited to act as members of a Choir School Committee and to advise concerning the formation and maintenance of the School. They will not be called upon for further financial aid beyond the first pledge.

We are hopeful that the opportunity of educating a boy during the most critical period of his life under such favorable circumstances, besides the great advantage to be obtained for the Church music, will appeal strongly to you. The plan has been the result of much anxious thought on the part of the Rector, and he is most solicitous for its success.

A form of pledge is enclosed on which we ask you to indicate your willingness to become a patron for any period from one to five years.

The undersigned constitute the Music Committee of the Vestry.

Please make your response to Mr. Steele, 23 Wall Street., New York City."

Sincerely yours,

Faithfully yours,
R. B. Dodson[20]

Truesdale replied on the 18 October saying 'the proposed letter is a very good one, and I will be willing to join with yourself and Mr. Steele in sending it out to such members of St. Thomas Church as you can find to send it to.'[21]

4.3 Choir School established

By January of 1919, the decision to proceed with the founding of the choir school was made.[22] However, with twenty subscribers (instead of thirty), this allowed for only twenty boys to be taken on full scholarships. Although this was not the intended plan, TTN felt they could make a strong start to the school and bring about a new direction in the musical life of the parish.[23] The question of finding a headmaster was in the forefront of TTN's mind (recalling his previous writings about the importance of Scaife's tenure at York), for this position was vitally important to the project's existence and wellbeing. He had been in contact with his sixteen-year-old son Philip's headmaster, Charles Strout, at his boarding school, St. Luke's in Wayne, Pennsylvania, about locating the proper person. In a letter to his son, dated 12 January 1919, TTN wrote:

> Tomorrow I am going down to see Mr. Dodson at 12.45, and lunch with him at 1 o'c. We shall see Mr. Steele and Mr. Truesdale, and get the lease for the Choir School signed; as soon as that is done we can go ahead with the house. I hope to have it in full swing in about 6 or 7 weeks; anyhow by Easter we shall have things going strong…Tell Mr. Strout Mr. Reynolds did not accept our offer owing to ill health, and that we have appointed a very first rate man- an M.A. of Columbia, a fine scholar and good all round Man.[24]

The lease was officially signed on 15 January - thus St. Thomas Church Choir School was established.[25] In the PYB of 1919, the men of the music committee thanked the Rector and church for their support and were most pleased that Mr. Noble had a fully operational choir school. They did note, however, that ten more places were available for boys and the cost was only $500 a year. By 1920, they hoped all places would be filled.[26]

TTN reported:

> It is now nearly seven years since I became organist and choirmaster of STC. During that time I have never failed to plead for a Choir School and I am thankful to say I have not pleaded in vain. Thanks to the energy of the Rector, the Music Committee and the generous response of twenty members of our congregation, a school is now established and as far as it goes it is a tremendous success. We have twenty-one scholars, fourteen of them boarders and seven day boys. It costs $500 to support one boy. Those who have visited the school know what a beautiful home it is and I am sure must have noticed what a happy set of boys we have. I need not say what an enormous advantage it is to our music in having this school for I am able to teach these children daily and I find that the more they sing, the more they love it. That our daily rehearsal is not looked upon as "lessons" but as an hour of joy to all concerned is very evident to visitors who sometimes attend the rehearsals. We have made a fine start, let us "carry on!" Enthusiasm is a wholesome disease. Will not some more members of our congregation become infected?
> I am grateful to all members of the choir for their loyalty at all times, for the fine spirit shown on all occasions. One word of very special thanks must be given to my loyal and devoted assistant, Mr. Philippi. He has always given his best, and it is sad to know that he is to leave us for we shall all miss his genial and happy manner. At the same time we must congratulate him upon his appointment to the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, and wish him God-speed![27]

With this news, TTN sought more talented boys to attend the new school. He composed a letter to send to prospective students about the advantages of attending such a school as STC choir school:

My dear_____

I think you may interested to know that your son may obtain a scholarship in the St. Thomas's Choir School which is to be opened very shortly.

There are many distinctive advantages in such a school, for instance-

1) The boys will be divided into small classes, so that special attention can be give to every member of the class. This is practically impossible in the Public and High Schools, seeing that many of the classes have from two to three hundred scholars.
2) The teaching staff consists of a head-master, assistant master, both men having been chosen because of their splendid attainments and experiences in teaching boys of the age from ten to fifteen, both gentlemen are graduates of Columbia University.
3) Since an all round symmetrical development of each boy is our aim, the moral and physical training will be thoroughly looked after.
4) The headmaster's wife will act as House Mother, she has had two year's experience in dealing with young boys, and is qualified in every way for this responsible position.
5) The boy's musical education will be infinitely more thorough, at least one hour a day will be devoted to singing, elementary theory of music, and solo work. This department will be in the hands of the Choir Master and his assistant.
6) This thorough scholastic and musical education will be given in a homelike atmosphere, in a charming house situated at West 55th Street, where the same principles of good manners and good breeding that you would insist upon at home, will be carried out. I shall be glad to hear from you on the matter.[28]

The seven years of poor singing (as evidenced in the yearbooks and music lists) and constant posturing were finally over for TTN; his major goal had been realised. He was not the first in history to fight the battle for quality control over a church choir, but he was certainly one of the first in America.

Many folks set to work in making ready the new choir school, including MSN. She knew, from her own childhood in the cathedral system, being the daughter of the Dean of Ely Cathedral, the importance of providing a home-like and maternal environment for the boarders. She helped select and purchase many of the furnishings for the Choir School house, including making numerous trips to the famous Wanamakers Department store on Broadway to purchase furnishings and accessories.[29] TTN wrote to his son about the wonderful things that were bought at Wanamakers - 'no junk!' he said. He spoke of his intention to purchase high-quality goods that would serve the new school very well.[30] By March, the school was ready for its grand opening. The boys and TTN, along with the rector, devised a special service set for 3 March 1919. The boys kept a diary from that opening year, from which the following is taken:

Choir School Dedication Service

On Monday afternoon, March 3rd at 4 o'clock the service of dedication took place at the Choir School; conducted by the Rector.

Order of Service:
Hymn: Stand up for Jesus
Opening Sentences
Prayers
Hymn: Fight the Good Fight
Address: The Rector
Benediction
Hymn

Following this Service of Dedication, the Rector gave an informal address, likewise, Mr. Noble.

Those present: The Rector, The Vestry (represented by Messrs Robert B. Dodson and Fahnestock, Mr. Steele unfortunately prevented by a severe cold; The Staff, Subscribers and friends. Reception and tea following the Service.[31]

It was bittersweet that Philippi left STC just as the school was set to open. He served TTN and the church faithfully for seven years and his enthusiasm contributed greatly to the successes of the choir and the musical community of the parish. From 1919 until September 1921, there was no listing of an assistant organist, except from Easter to September of 1921. During most of this two year period, TTN took responsibility for playing the organ and the choir sang without a conductor. Such an experience looked back to his times at Ely and York and his time as Stanford's assistant at Trinity College.[32]

4.4 Lawrence K. Whipp

Lawrence K. Whipp filled the interim period in 1921, with the only record at STC of Whipp's employment being found in a yearbook with TTN offering thanks for his acting as assistant.[33] Whipp departed STC to take up the post of Organist and Choirmaster of the American Cathedral of the Holy Trinity in Paris, France.[34] The future importance of Whipp is a part of history mostly unknown in the United States. Whipp was born in 1888 in Lake City, Minnesota, later moving to Denver, Colorado as a young man.[35] Following his brief tenure at STC, he moved to Paris where, on 1 October 1921, he began his duties at the American Cathedral. He knew the cathedral and the parishioners well, having spent a year in Paris, before his time at STC, singing in the cathedral choir. The cathedral news publication, The Parish Kalendar, printed the news of Whipp's hiring, stating:

This quotation is in reference to Stanford's constant absence from Trinity, leaving all the duties of running the chapel music programme to TTN.

He was called to Holy Trinity from St. Thomas' Church, New York, where he has been acting Choir Master and Organist during the absence of Mr. Tertius Noble. We believe that we are fortunate to secure his leadership of our church music at this time.[36]

To correct the Parish Kalendar, Whipp would have served as Assistant to TTN, and according to all church documents in New York, actually was never officially hired by the church (his name as afore mentioned is absent from any listing of staff, etc.), nor did he substitute for TTN during any extended leave of absence. He became very successful during his years in the French capital, studying the organ with Marcel Dupré and modelling his approach to training the choir on the system he had observed at STC.[37] He remained an employee of the cathedral but:

in June 1940, Paris fell to the Nazis. Most of the American community fled, including the Dean, The Very Reverend Frederick W. Beekman. Whipp remained in Paris to care for, indeed, to minister to, the Cathedral and the small American community that remained in Paris.

His ministry to Americans elsewhere was considerable. In a letter of December 1940, from the Mission Populaire Evangélique de France, he and the Junior Guild are thanked for an unspecified gift, which benefited more than 1,300 young people, to the Mission. On May 23 of 1941, he received a letter from the U.S. Consulate in Biarritz asking for clothing for a group of Americans that had been aboard the USS Zam Zam, and who had been shipwrecked in the South Atlantic. The package arrived in 5 days.

Whipp and the Guild were thanked by a consulate official, who described both the shipwreck scene and the arrival and distribution of the aid package in the touching letter. [38]

His work during the Nazi occupation included hiding Jews and working to protect the cathedral from destruction brought on by the Axis powers. Eventually 'Whipp was arrested on December 12, 1941 (following Pearl Harbour and the USA's entrance into the war), and one week later, December 18 (verified by Nazi documents) was interned at the holding camp at Compiègne, north of Paris.'[39] Later, in 1942, he was released from the Nazi prison and reported back to the cathedral, then under the supervision of a German Lutheran Pastor. He remained there and cared for the cathedral until the Nazis were forced out following the allied invasion on 6 June 1944. Paris was not officially liberated until 25 August.[40] Eight months later, Whipp mysteriously disappeared:

On Sunday February 11, 1945 he [Whipp] played the morning service at the Cathedral. The Dean, supposedly, congratulated him in the Courtyard, saying he had never played better. He lunched with the Benoit family, and at about 4 pm, left the house, supposedly destined for another friend's home in town. He disappeared. Articles were written about his mysterious disappearance on both sides of the Atlantic. On April 17, 1945, his body was found in the Seine at Argenteuil.[41]

TTN never mentioned Whipp again in any of his writings, and following his disappearance and death, no other reference was found in church documents. While it is likely that he was made aware of the circumstances of Whipp's tragic demise, communications between Europe and North America were difficult and infrequent. In any event, even if Whipp were only a small part of the STC musical legacy, the training he received at the hands of TTN set him up for a successful career in a foreign country at one of the most testing times in its history.

Though Philippi's leaving left a gap, the launch of the school was successful and by the end of April 1919, after almost two months of full operation of the school, the Vestry met, upon which:

Mr. Steele reported that the Choir School established at 123 W 55th Street, New York City, having been opened with appropriate service in March; the building being well adapted and in complete order, and a three year lease having been executed at $2500 per annum. Furniture and equipment had been supplied at a cost of about $2000; the school now being operated with ten boys in residence and ten as day scholars. The head master and assistant master were doing efficient work. The cost of food was some-what more than the estimate but, upon the whole, the enterprise had been started quite satisfactorily. Mr. Steele further stated that thus far all outlay had been made out of the Choir School fund, but that the question might well be raised whether the vestry should not appropriate the cost of furnishing and equipping the building and its annual rental. No action by the vestry is desired at present.[42]

The Rector, in connection with Steele's report, also stated:

…that the influence of the Choir School upon the boys is already to be seen. The boys being quite young, the affect of the discipline and training upon them is all the more apparent. The spirit among them is much better than under the old plan. During the Lenten season the choir boys had been divided in two groups of ten each, it having been assumed that all the boys would not want to attend the services, but both groups wanted to come and many of the boys were interested in the addresses. They had all become more and more a part of the church family, regarding the privilege of attending services as a reward rather than a duty to be performed.[43]

4.5 Grace Church and competition

If competition was indeed an underlying factor in starting the school (as stated in earlier correspondence among the music committee), it is certainly assumed that the situation of the choir school at the wealthy Grace Church was known to TTN, EMS and others at STC. Grace Church school began in 1894, under the leadership of James Morris Helfenstein.[44] Helfenstein knew well the system in NYC at the time - 'the choir offering the highest salaries fills its ranks by depleting others less fortunate, and the boys are in the habit of traveling from choir to choir in search of one offering the highest financial inducement.'[45] Therefore, his theory was to provide a stable environment in the form of a school, to provide an incentive for the boys to stay (similar to the STC reasoning):[46]

The [Grace Church] school was first planned for only sixteen boys. The rest of the boys in the choir lived too far away to attend…Out-of-town boys were boarded with local families, while local boys remained in their own homes, and a lunchroom for them all was opened at No. 50 Clinton Place. (The cost of the lunch-room was at first borne by a church couple, Mr. and Mrs. W. Butler Duncan. Later the cost was absorbed into the school budget.) The ages of the boys the first years were from ten to thirteen; by 1896 they were accepted at the age of eight. The expense of the school was borne entirely by the church; the boys' families paid only for their books and paper. Parents were, however, asked to sign an agreement to keep their children in the school until their voices changed. If boys were withdrawn sooner, their parents were obliged to reimburse the school for the cost of their education. The boys were also paid a small salary, which was held in an account for them until the end of the year in which their voices changed and they left the school.[47]

The reality that the boys did not board gave rise to issues beyond the church's control - particularly in relation to the out-of–town boys, one of whom, while staying in town with his host family, was said to have frequented a certain theatre night after night.[48] The type of entertainment in this theatre was rumoured to be of a very questionable nature. This issue eventually resulted in the purchase of housing for all the boys. In consequence, with the amelioration of boarding facilities, the prospect of an education at the choir school dramatically increased, so that, by 1904, for every two vacancies in the school, there were three hundred applicants.[49]

This success and expedient growth at Grace came with a cost, both emotionally and financially. In terms of the former there was the death of the beloved Rector, Dr. Huntington, in 1909. His successor, Dr. Charles Slattery lacked rapport with the boys and school staff.[50] From a financial point of view:

in spite of the wealth of the parish and its congregation in those days (1910), the School operated on a curiously hand-to-mouth basis. The Vestry appropriated about $5000 each year, to which would be added various smaller sums as well. The total budget was $8000, of which the largest expenditure was for food, and the second largest, for salaries. (Salaries in 1910 came to $2,304.89 for a staff of six.)

Behind the scenes, both the Rector and Mr. Helfenstein were doing their utmost to develop an endowment fund that would cover the real expenses of the school… by 1915 the endowment for music had reached $71,000, and it was his hope that when Mr. Helfenstein's twenty-fifth anniversary arrived, the endowment would be $500,000 (in the year 1919). He [The Rector] continued to write urgently about the need for funds, and in 1917 disclosed the true state of the school's affairs. The actual expenses were much higher than previous budgets indicated. The additional costs had been covered by "one or two" friends of the school, but he warned this situation could not go on, and that $10,000 more would be needed annually to meet expenses. He was writing during World War I, when costs of all kinds were rising.

There were other troubles as well [compounded by the end of the war and the national expenses associated therewith], troubles that developed only gradually but which culminated in the abrupt resignation of Mr. Helfenstein in 1922.[51]

Following his resignation and another change in clergy, the school continued to struggle and the 1929 stock market crash proved to be the final nail in the coffin for the choir school. In 1934 Grace Church School formally eliminated its boarding programme for choristers and changed its name to Grace Church School for Boys. The school then accepted non-choristers who paid for their own tuition.[52]

In another description of the music programme of Grace Church (found on the church website) it states that they (Grace) served as the model for many other boy-choir schools, including STC.[53] This, however, is not completely factual. TTN's model was based on his experiences as an English cathedral organist, with a flair for the American 'can-do' way. Grace Church's fundamental issues, and ultimate collapse, were based on poor leadership and financial instability - two items that TTN made sure were not issues for his own programme. Likewise, the other famous choir school at the Cathedral of SJD had personal and financial issues, including problems with the choirmaster's rapport with the boys and staff. [54]

4.6 Strong foundation at STC and the early years

STC, by contrast, was in the ascendancy while the music programmes at Grace Church and SJD slipped into a steady decline. The nature of assuredness that TTN and STC provided for their boys left a lasting impression on them, many of whom carried this with them as they went off to fight in the Second World War.[55] The key to the basic success at STC was proper training (according to TTN), and adequate and sustainable funding. Like any good investment, Steele knew that the foundation had to be strong enough to withstand tough times.[56] For all the choir schools of NYC, finding boys from a background of financial need was also an important mission.

Trinity Wall Street had long advocated for these charity boys from their 'Chapels.'[57] Over the years, STC drew boys from many backgrounds, including clergy children and other members connected with the Episcopal Church. TTN was a charismatic man and this charisma created a Utopian atmosphere for his choristers.[58] STC ran a very kind, yet strict school. Former chorister, William Weigle, spoke of his experiences particularly after having been a chorister at SJD, where the clergy and staff treated the boys more like hired help than active members of a worshipping community. Weigle's father was an Episcopal priest, known for social action, having been the rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, also known as The Little Church Around the Corner. With his father's connections, he was able to transfer to STC.

From a historical perspective, the first year of the choir school was wildly successful for all parties with a vested interest. The foundation was secure and the next ten years proved extremely fruitful, despite several unexpected challenges. By 1923, Reed Miller, longtime tenor soloist in the choir, had worked for STC for twelve years. Hired by WM, Miller served TTN faithfully, and in particular during the early days of his tenure. His beautiful singing crowned many of the high profile services at the church, helping the struggling choir to achieve a level of excellence, even with the difficulties surrounding the quality of the boys singing. Throughout his time, Miller was regarded as a senior member of the music staff; his name was consistently listed separately from the other singers in church records, his name appearing alongside those of TTN and the assistant organist.[59] As a famous soloist of oratorio and art song in NYC, Miller was well loved by the Manhattan musical community. He worked as one of the first recording artists for Columbia Records in

These chapels (as large as full size parish churches) were eventually sold and have since become independent churches in their own right, with titles separate from their original parent church. It was also a help to the fundraising efforts to promote helping underprivileged children achieve a new path in life. TTN experienced a similar situation at St Johns' Wilton Road

1909 and continued to make recordings throughout his career for many of the top record labels of the day.[60] TTN found Miller to be not only a trusted colleague, but also a personal friend. TTN and MSN often spent time with Miller and his wife outside the professional environment of the church.[61] At the time of the Choir School opening, Miller was the highest paid musician in STC, other than TTN and DRP. His average monthly salary was $150, which in today's market is equivalent to $1850. The next highest paid singers were two basses who each made $40 a month.[62]

On 29 December 1923, the international news media announced the death of Gustave Eiffel (1832-1923); on the same day in New York, another tragedy occurred:

> A message came Saturday to Mrs. Van Der Veer asking her to come to New York at once, saying that her son-in-law, Reed Miller, was very ill. Before she had time to make her train connections, the second message came that he had passed away. He had a severe coughing spell and died immediately from apoplexy. (caused by a burst blood vessel in his throat)[63]

The funeral was held the following Monday, 31 December at STC with the full choir singing for their lost colleague. The hymns were 'The Strife is O'er', 'O Come all Ye Faithful', and 'I heard the voice of Jesus Say' to the tune VOX DILECTI, by John Bacchus Dykes. The choir sang TTN's Souls of the Righteous, which Miller had sung many times at the funerals of parishioners and choir members.[64] TTN remembered:

> in the death of our beloved friend, Reed Miller, tenor soloist for over twelve years, we have sustained a very severe loss. As a soloist he might be termed great, and as a member of the Church no one ever worked with more enthusiasm and wonderful efficiency. Such work as his will be ever remembered by us all.[65]

4.7 Headmasters

In regard to the position of Headmaster of the Choir School, there is little or no documentation of the early days other than reports in the parish yearbooks. The first headmaster, Clarence J. Smith, worked only one semester before leaving the school. His successor, Raymond Gauger began in the autumn of 1919 and departed in 1922, leaving just before the expansion of the school. The church's documentation of headmasters states that Gauger began work in 1920, but this is incorrect. Gauger, an alumnus of the University of Illinois, was recognized in a 1919 journal: 'Raymond Gauger's choir of boys from the St. Thomas Choir School in New York was selected to sing with the New York Symphony Orchestra during its stay in the city. Gauger is head master of the school.'[66] Herbert Hannan succeeded Gauger and stayed until 1925, when Clair J. Smith arrived for a two-year tenure. In 1928, Charles Benham was hired by TTN and remained with the school until TTN's retirement in June of 1943. In his Memoirs there is no mention of any of the headmasters other than Benham and that he 'was a most able man.'[67] One might find this lacuna odd, considering the extreme importance TTN placed on hiring the correct headmaster, given that he placed such emphasis on the partnership between the school and the Choirmaster and on the school's success. The assumption that there were difficulties between the early headmasters and TTN is a plausible argument. TTN was known for his strong resolve and unwillingness to compromise. The degree of aggression he displayed in starting the school was example enough of his will and determination. However, TTN new better than to take on the reins of the school himself unlike those at Grace Church where the choirmaster also served as headmaster. Hence, when

[Grace's] Helfenstein departed, it was a double loss from which the church failed to recover.[68]

4.8 Charles Benham, Charles Steele and growth of the school

Charles Benham, who began as headmaster in 1928 and remained until 1943, was responsible for the ultimate success of the choir school, in some ways, more than TTN himself. TTN had the musical interests of the school at heart, but ultimately Benham's academic focus made the school competitive with other non-musical schools, thereby attracting more than enough eligible candidates to STC.[69] TTN trusted Benham who had a strong understanding of what was important for the boys to be successful academically and socially. Born in March of 1890, Benham served in the US Army during the First World War and subsequently remained in France where he was educated at the University of Montpellier, ultimately graduating from Williams College (Williamstown, Massachusetts) in 1910. He taught in several private schools before being hired by STC in 1928.[70] After his first full year at the school, Benham wrote his first annual report on the school which was published in the yearbook:

> Those who have observed the operation of the Choir school during the past year will bear me out, I feel, in the statement that definite progress has been made. There has been a notable advance in scholarship under the new curriculum, while the work of the masters, Mr. Vail and Mr. Ackerman, has been efficient and up-to-date. The health of the school is well-nigh perfect, being directly traceable to the loving care of our housemother, Mrs. Atwater, and to the experience and excellent judgment of our sports master, Mr. Cowell. The morale of the boys is reflected in their restrained conduct both in and out of the school; their loyalty and infectious enthusiasm are a source of constant inspiration and joy to us who have the high privilege of working among them.We shall lose seven boys in June this year. They go to various schools. One boy has been accepted for Kent, another hopes to enter the same school, while two are trying for Hotchkiss and one for Mercersburg. If only there were financial aid at hand for those of our graduates who are worthy and need help for the continuance of their studies, how complete this great work which the Church is doing here would be![71]

Benham's enthusiasm for the choir school was best communicated to the masses through the Yearbook. The Parish Yearbooks represent a valuable resource in charting the history of the music at STC. As instruments of propaganda, promoting only the words on the page without benefit of verbal dialogue, they provide valuable insight into the focus of the rector and vestry and the policies implemented by them. These Yearbooks, after all, represented the chief means of communication between the church authorities at STC, its parishioners and the wider community both in NYC and beyond.[72] While Benham's article charts the successes of the school, he did not fail to miss an opportunity to list what he felt to be the shortcomings of his short-lived predecessors in terms of the school's academic deficiencies. His control of the school helped to place many young boys on a path of betterment and social mobility, much like TTN and his own childhood.[73] The importance of the school, from this point forward, was placed on the boys' next steps in their formal education after their time at STC. TTN and Benham successfully conspired to create a curriculum designed to turn generations of their charges into gentlemen and leaders.[74]

TTN's tone in his reports was also drastically different from the early days. His focus, initially, was bewailing the quality of the music and the need for a choir school. In 1918 he stated unguardedly:

> For the last two years I have pleaded for a choir school, where our boys might be trained in a thoroughly efficient manner, not only as good singers and scholars, but with a better chance to develop character and so fit them to face the many problems of city life… The war is over, so let us help these little fellows to fight their battle with better equipment, such a training as is given to boys of the cathedrals of England would be a godsend to them; for hundreds of years, such schools have flourished, and have turned out great men, not only as musicians, but great men in the Church, in public service, in fact, in every walk of life. [75]

This then turned to progress reports about the music, improved quality of life, in general, and the successes of boys graduating from the choir school. By the late 1920s and early 30s, nearing ten years of operation for the school, his reports were enthusiastic with personal accounts of the boys' lives and the difference the school was making for them, both in their current positions in the school and beyond graduation.[76]

The physical growth of the school was also greatly enhanced. This came about in the summer of 1922 when the Nobles returned to England for a holiday: it was their first since the war. As it transpired, Steele was also in London on business and took the opportunity to invite TTN to lunch. As TTN recalled:

> [He] asked me [TTN] to lunch with him at Claridge's hotel where he was staying before going up to Scotland later on for the grouse shooting which he always enjoyed so much. The purpose of this luncheon was to talk over the Choir School and its future development. I need hardly say how happy I was at this turn of events and the prospect of a bigger and better building.[77]

Following their lunch meetings, TTN took the opportunity to introduce Steele to a number of his English colleagues, the chief among whom was Frederick Bridge (1844-1924), organist at Westminster Abbey. Bridge had been one of TTN's former teachers at the RCM (professor of harmony and counterpoint at the RCM during TTN's days as a student in the 1880s). Bridge's invitation to sit in the organ loft for Evensong clinched Steele's support of the choir school in New York, just as TTN had hoped it would:

> …and in his quiet and unassuming manner, Mr. Steele asked me when I got back to New York in September to look for a suitable building so that the Choir School might be enlarged, but on no account to mention that Mr. Steele was to be the buyer.[78]

The intensity of life in the choir school was most conducive to achieving results, both musically and academically, and larger facilities were essential. The exacting daily schedule was:

Rising bell – 7 a.m.
Breakfast – 7:30 a.m.
Prayers – 8 a.m.

This schedule allowed for a daily hour of musical rehearsal, in addition to the regular Friday evening rehearsal with the men of the choir. The one English cathedral piece missing from the schedule was the singing of daily choral evensong; Sunday was still the only day the choir sang in public.[80] While TTN had encouraged instrumental instruction for the choristers both at Ely Cathedral and York Minster, this aspect of the choristers' curriculum (which was an aspect of the choristers' education pioneered and strongly advocated by Stanford at Trinity College)[81] at the STC choir school had not yet been implemented.[82] For TTN and Benham, the formation of the boys as decent members of society was an important as their formation as musicians.[83] Although TTN had not yet achieved an English Cathedral musical schedule, he had in fact gained what he thought most important - control over the boys and their formation as members of society and as musicians.[84]

TTN did just as Steele had instructed in regard to the purchase of a larger space for the choir school. Luck was on his side in that the building directly adjacent to the current rented house was for sale. Steele agreed to purchase both houses and contribute $20,000 towards their remodelling in order to connect the two adjoining structures to form one building. The vestry and finance committee approved this motion upon the following condition, [that in order] to provide the balance of funds needed for the alteration (in addition to Steele's gift) a mortgage should be placed upon St. Thomas's Choir House not to exceed $40,000 and at interest not to exceed 5 and ½ %.[85]

Until this time in the young history of the school (1919-1923), the church and its Vestry had assumed all financial responsibilities for the choir school. With the Vestry agreeing to allow the school to take on a mortgage in 1923, a clear distinction is made, for the first time, between the fiduciary responsibilities of the church and that of the choir school.[86] That the finance committee approved the school's taking on a mortgage, in essence, declared the school to be a separate entity. Additionally, the church filed for a separate tax-exempt status for the choir school beginning in the fiscal year 1924.[87] From this juncture, a slow and embattled fight over boundaries and responsibilities between the church and school began. This, seemingly, was not the intent of the Vestry or the finance committee, in the early 1920s, and the Rector most certainly did not have these intentions. However, new leadership in the church would see things differently, particularly as personalities changed and financial times became more straitened.

EMS, having been one of the driving forces behind the formation of the choir school saw the church and school as one inseparable organization, striving for excellence in all things. He wrote to the parish:

The opening of our Choir School four years ago has been fully justified. Not only has our music reached a higher level, but those who are in frequent contact with our choir-boys have observed their steady gain in all good qualities. The School has lived in a rented house, 123 West 55th Street, all too small for the twenty boys, two masters, house-mother and servants. More-over, for the proper rendering of the music in our large church we have found it necessary to enlarge the number of boys in the Choir School from twenty to thirty. Two serious problems confronted us: the necessity of more room for the School, and the need of ten more scholarships for the support of the new boys. The first problem has been solved by Mr. Charles Steele who purchased and presented to the vestry the two buildings at 121 and 123 W 55th street, which between May and September will receive extensive alterations. Thus by the gift of a generous parishioner we shall have one of the best choir schools. The problem of the ten additional scholarships has been solved temporarily by a good friend who has guaranteed these until they are distributed. This good friend is already sustaining two choir scholarships and your Rector hopes that ten parishioners will quickly write to him and offer to take a scholarship of $500 a year. Will you be one?'

TTN also remarked on the happenings:

The Choir School, founded in February, 1918, is now an accomplished fact. Last year, it was still in its infancy, but now, owing to the generosity of a member for the Vestry (who has been heart and soul in this great undertaking ever since the idea was first thought of), we can say that we are grown up! Two splendid houses, 121 and 123 W 55Th, bought in November of this year, and donated to the church for a School Building, will, in the spring of 1923 be remodelled and made entirely adequate to house 30 boys, and the staff. [88]

The good friend about whom the rector spoke was Steele. Once again, Steele was the quiet force behind the enterprise, determined to see his investment become a success. The interdependence concerning the operational aspects of the music of STC created a perfect triumvirate. TTN and EMS were utterly attuned to one another both in terms of their philosophy for the church and its music, producing a strong bond of mutual admiration and respect. Steele was committed to the enterprise from the moment he shook TTN's hand in 1912, and the coming years only produced a childlike infectious enthusiasm that, for Steele, manifested itself in unparalleled philanthropy.[89] This way of operating would have been new to TTN. His experiences in Ely, York, and even Cambridge would have been with Deans and Chapters and multiple layers of committee bureaucracy. In this case, he was dealing directly with the rector and the source of the money; he had, in essence, become an American entrepreneur.

Steele's business acumen ensured he was able to predict the potential pitfalls in such a complex relationship. Therefore in 1925, his extraordinary philanthropy reached a new level when he saw fit to ensure the financial security of the school, lest something ever happen to him or his ability to support the it:

[88] PYB 1923. The reason for the incorrect 1918 date is unknown.
[89] See p. 116.

I [Charles Steele] am proposing to turn over to the Rector, Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Thomas's Church the securities described upon the accompanying list, having a par value of $275,000, a present market value of upward of $288,000, and yielding an annual income amounting to $18,625; also the sum of $2672.13 in cash.

It is my wish that these securities shall constitute and be retained as an endowment fund for the support of St. Thomas's Choir School. At the same time, recognizing the possibility of changes in the situation that may occur in the future, I do not desire that the Church should be confined to its use of the fund, or the income thereof, to this particular purpose, in case it should become no longer possible, nor desirable, to continue the Choir School.

I therefore propose to give this fund to the Church absolutely, in the confidence that my expressed wish will be carried out, so long as the Vestry shall deem it proper and desirable to continue the Choir School.

It has been suggested that the fund should have a designation, which should, in some manner, memorialize the donor. Any such designation which the Vestry may approve will be quite satisfactory to me.[90]

The church agreed to accept the gift, with an appropriate title of 'The Charles Steele Foundation' given, and it was arranged that a small tablet be affixed in the choir school, with Steele's approval.[91] EMS, being a great orator and dramatist, chose to announce the news from the pulpit on Easter Day, April 12, 1925. The New York Times later published an article:

Charles Steele, senior warden of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street, has made an Easter present of $300,000 to that parish for the endowment of St. Thomas's Choir School, 121 and 123 West Fifty-Fifth Street. Mr. Steele, who is a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan and Co., had previously bought and equipped the two houses in which the school is maintained. He did this at a cost of $200,000. Mr. Steele is a great lover of church music and he has been a generous benefactor of the school since it was begun in 1919. He is also an ardent supporter of St. Thomas's. The Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas's announced the gift just before he closed his Easter sermon yesterday morning. Mr. Steele was in the congregation. "I cannot in the presence of Mr. Steele more than make the announcement of his generous gift and to mention what it means to the parish and to your Rector that we have in our midst one of such vision," said Dr. Stires. "We thank him and we thank God." There are only two other churches in Manhattan which have choir schools. One is the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and the other is Grace Episcopal Church, Broadway and Tenth Street. Both are heavily endowed. In the St. Thomas Choir School are thirty boys. The head is Dr. T. Tertius Noble, organist and choir director of St. Thomas's.[92]

Steele allocated the funds in the following way; diversity was key, lest one stock fail to produce less than its expected outcome:

$25,000 Nord Railway Bonds, due October 1, 1950
$100,000 Southern Railway Bonds, due in 1956
cash totaling $3, 547.13[93]

All of these items were managed by the firm of J. P. Morgan and the annual financial yield (dividends) was paid directly to the church to finance the choir school and its needs.[94]

The direct financial responsibility of the church for the Choir School, at this point, was greatly reduced, due to the return from the stocks and bonds. The total budget for music was roughly $40,000; this included all salaries and expenses in operating the school. The dividends provided approximately $19,000 and the church was then responsible for the remaining $20,000.[95] The New York Times article announcing Steele's gift confirmed the existence of choir schools at both Grace Church and the Cathedral of St John the Divine; however, the choir school at STC was unique in having established a choral foundation. No other school, at this time, had received such a large and generous gift. This placed STC at the forefront in the city's choir scene in regard to infrastructure and financial security.[96] Even with the straitened times of the late 1920s, STC was able to survive while Grace and SJD struggled. As mentioned earlier, Grace realized that raising money for the boys was difficult, and when the reserves were depleted, they were left with no choice but to dissolve into a regular day school for children. They had become dependent on yearly donations, instead of long-term yielding securities.[97]

4.9 Departure of Ernest Stires to become Bishop of Long Island

The most significant change for STC came in 1925 when the Rector, EMS, was elected Bishop of Long Island. This day must have been expected, but still was a shock to the people of STC. It was inevitable that EMS's abilities as administrator, pastor and pioneer would be recognized sooner or later by the national church in the offer of preferment to a diocesan see; however, after so successful a period, where working partnerships had been consolidated over a number of years, the appointment of a suitable successor would not prove an easy task. The work TTN and EMS had achieved together had been overwhelmingly dominated by the initiative to establish the choir school and establish a music programme modelled on English cathedral lines. The two men had worked well together and formed a close and creative working relationship.

The day of EMS's Consecration to the Episcopacy was a grand day in the life of the Fifth Avenue congregation, as they were selected as the host site for the service. Those from all walks of life attended the Consecration; the procession of clergy and dignitaries was so large that four processional hymns were required. Other music included the Stanford B flat Communion Service, which TTN had introduced to STC some twelve years earlier.[98]

The legacy of EMS's twenty-four years as rector had begun shortly before the destruction by fire of the second St Thomas's church in NYC in 1905. He had been responsible for securing funds to build Cram's imposing edifice on Fifth Avenue. This, in turn, led to the appointment of TTN to raise musical standards and establish a choral programme along English cathedral lines to inspire the worship of thousands of worshippers. Beautiful music and EMS's charismatic preaching and personality conspired to create intoxicating alchemy for success. EMS stated 'human history is the story of the development of human personality; the only new element in that development is Christ.'[99] These words were the crux of his Rectorate. He allowed and encouraged the human spirit to flourish under his leadership. The self-confidence and intuition he, himself, possessed allowed the creativity of others to burgeon, particularly in his relationship with TTN. The trust between the Rector and his musician, as Stanford had articulated many years earlier, is sometimes a thorny path, but EMS was able to find security in the successes he allowed others to achieve; Christ and the church were the focus of his inspiration. The difficult task before the vestry was to select a similarly empathetic successor.

4.10 Roelif H. Brooks

The vestry's first call was issued to the Rev. Dr. Charles Clingman, Rector of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, Alabama; however, he did not accept the invitation.[100] The next choice was the Rev. Dr. Roelif Hasbrouck Brooks (Rector of St. Paul's in Albany NY), who, one week before being contacted by STC, had been nominated as Dean of the Cathedral of the Incarnation in Garden City, Long Island.[101] On 14 June, 1926, after much deliberation, Brooks sent a letter to Steele's office on Wall Street, accepting the call:

The Wardens and Vestrymen
St. Thomas's Church
New York City

Gentlemen:

I have received a certified copy of the Minutes adopted at the meeting of the Vestry of St. Thomas's Church, New York City, held June 10th, 1926, which advises me of my election as Rector of said Parish. In accepting this election, which I do as of October first, 1926, I am not unmindful of my limitations to meet the great task which lies before me. It will be a great venture of faith and in this spirit I mean to give myself unreservedly to do the Master's Will along with you and all who identified with the Parish, and with God's help I shall do my best to maintain the high ideals of Christian service which have made St. Thomas's Church what it is to-day.

Roelif H. Brooks[102]

Brooks's style as Rector was markedly different from that of EMS. Almost ten years EMS's junior, he was fifty-one years of age when he arrived at STC. Upon receiving the call from STC, he stated, 'I did not want to come – but my predecessor, the Bishop of Long Island and your rector for twenty-five years, and the Vestry placed before me a challenge to preach the Gospel, a challenge such as I could not rightfully decline.'[103] Seemingly a more serious man than EMS, his initial deliberation and reluctance to accept the call to the church was a sign of greater difficulties to come; particularly in his relationship with the music department.[104]

At the time of Brooks's arrival as rector of STC, TTN operated from an impressive powerbase that would have been threatening to all but the most self-assured cleric; in short, the pre-eminence of both choir and director were well-entrenched. Predictably, this supposedly unassailable position threatened to undermine the relationship between TTN and his new employer from the outset. In addition, TTN's long-standing relationship with the STC parishioners had become an unbreakable bond; he had the ear of the most influential among them from every perspective, musical and otherwise. EMS's popularity, charismatic preaching and adroit handling of his parishioners had increased the choir's visibility considerably as the congregation numbers increased.[105] The prominence established for STC by EMS and TTN led directly to both national and international radio broadcasts as the services from STC were transmitted directly into the homes of those at home and abroad:

> The singing of the choir and congregation, the sermon of Dr. Ernest M. Stires, the organ playing of Dr. T. Tertius Noble, and every word and sound of the service was picked up by nine microphones placed in different parts of the church, carried by wire to Newark and there sent broadcast for thousands of miles in all directions. This was the first time a complete service was sent over the world by radio. It is said even the clinking of coins dropped in the collection plates was heard.[106]

TTN later recalled this increase in visibility:

> When Bishop Stires was Rector of St Thomas Church, for a number of years the morning service was broadcast over a nation wide hook up. These broadcasts reached thousands of people throughout the United States and Canada. Letters received by Dr. Stires revealed sincere appreciation from those who were not able to attend any church through illness or infirmity, and others who lived in a community where there was no church. I remember one letter in particular sent from the backwoods of Canada in which the Rector was informed that on each Sunday morning, a gathering of people would assemble in one large room in a farmhouse where there was a radio receiver and there join in the service, singing the hymns, and even collecting an offertory during the anthem. Every week this money was sent to St Thomas Church to be added to the sum collected during the offertory.[107]

Not long after Brooks began his tenure at STC, it became clear that he was 'micro-manager.' One of the first petty power struggles between him and TTN concerned the choir's singing at Elizabeth Arden's store.[108] That Brooks had walked into a church position where each department worked like a well-oiled machine presented him with a problem: none of it was his achievement and none of it was under his control. In addition to its work at STC, the choir consolidated its support base by singing in private homes and neighbouring retail shops along Fifth Avenue. These secular associations prompted Brooks to attempt to assert his authority.[109] When TTN engaged the choir to sing at Elizabeth Arden (just across the avenue from the STC), an engagement that had been on the choir calendar for many years, without first seeking the approval of the Vestry or the Rector, Brooks saw this as a direct challenge to his authority. It was later said by a future Organist and

Choirmaster, Gerre Hancock, that after Brooks stopped the choir from singing in Miss Arden's shop, 'it was many decades until the Vestry could be convinced of the benefits of the choir's visibility, outside the four walls of the church.'[110]

TTN was understandably exasperated by Brooks's antagonistic, even mean-spirited approach, and the entry in his memoirs makes for a candid account:

> For a number of years, we were engaged by Elizabeth Arden to sing at the Christmas party given for those who worked in her factory. But after a time this was frowned on by the Rector and Vestry and eventually stopped. I never knew quite why, but one does not if one is wise and wants to keep one's job oppose the policies of one's employer however stupid the viewpoint may be from one's own point of view. To bring Christmas cheer and the Christmas spirit among a group of people even if they are in the cosmetic business is not I think detrimental to the growth of Christianity. I am convinced that many of the women who were parishioners at St Thomas were ardent followers of Elizabeth Arden and used her products regularly.[111]

Many of the choristers, seventy years after their time in the school, still recall visiting Miss Arden's shop during the holidays. She was so delighted to have received the boys and heard their music, that she gave them gifts of perfume and other cosmetics to take home to their mothers as Christmas gifts (as was recalled by TTN). They also remembered the Christmas services in the church where, as preludial music, TTN would align the boys into the shape of a cross and place them in the centre of the Quire. From this position they would sing Christmas carols from memory as the congregation gathered to worship.[112]

The petulant (and, arguably, pompous) attitude adopted by Brooks (in the name of saving and promoting Christianity) clouded the life of the parish during his tenure. The dark times brought on by the depression and the Second World War did little to assist a more lighthearted atmosphere, even though the choir school was taking a more broad and open approach under Benham's leadership.[113] It is likely

[113] Benham along with TTN, sought to take the boys away from the 'new money' attitude of the 1920s and 1930s and ground them in a more solid, continental view of life. EMS, of course, was much more travelled than Brooks, and this was made all the more apparent in his judgments regarding influences that Brooks had been introduced to STC by Steele, Truesdale and Dodson, all of whom were influential members of the church and its music committee. In addition, TTN had arguably established at STC the most sophisticated music programme within the Episcopal Church. In Brooks's defence, it may simply have been the case that he had no experience of music departments of this size and influence and was, understandably, overwhelmed and outgunned.[114] As a newcomer, the fact that the church and its substantial music department were all overseen by the same people made for an atmosphere of perceived incestuousness. Moreover, TTN, the man responsible for the general conduct of the services (due to the increasing amount of music and English cathedral style, choir-led liturgy) was hired by the same three men, and together, with them, built the Choir School. Brooks would soon learn that Steele was the key figure (and obstacle) effecting change within the parish. In the late 1930s, change would come, but with a price.

4.11 Andrew Tietjen

The control that TTN possessed over STC caused Brooks to view TTN's position as autocratic; the organist being surrounded by an entourage of admiring and sycophantic acolytes. One of this group of admirers, the successor to Maurice Garabrant (assistant organist from 1921-1926), was Andrew Tietjen (1926-1935). He was the first home-grown assistant organist at STC. Born in New York on 13 August 1910 into a family of German immigrants, his family owned a grocery store on East 40th and his parents, John and Marie Tietjen, worked hard to support their four sons, John, George, Andrew and Walter.[115] The family loved music and all four children developed an appreciation and interest in the arts at an early age. Tietjen had demonstrated conspicuous musical promise as a youngster. At the age of ten he had upon boys. This was recalled in interviews. It was encouraged for each boy to explore knowledge and to gain respect for all persons.

[114] Although, it was widely known his music department in Albany was considerable and run by F. Candlyn.

joined the choir of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church in NYC where he had come to the notice of the choirmaster, Arthur Hyde (1875-1920). Hyde had recommended to Tietjen's parents that they send him to the choir school at STC where the rigorous residential programme would provide him with a uniquely thorough musical grounding.[116] In establishing such a good reputation so early on, albeit within the incestuous network of New York City church music, the choir school had made much headway during its first year of existence.[117] The year was 1921, the second full year of operation for the new choir school of St. Thomas's Church. We are told by Tietjen's widow, Yolanda Tietjen-Fitzgerald, that this was one of the happiest periods in his life.[118] He, like so many of the boys, thrived under the intense instruction this environment provided, and they looked to TTN as a musical inspiration and as a father figure in their lives; they adored him.[119]

Living at the choir school, Andy and other choristers rehearsed and sang under the direction of TTN. Apart from singing, young Andy practiced on the school's piano the lessons he had learned at home. Dr. Noble overheard him and offered organ lessons. Andy was on full scholarship so Dr. Noble arranged for the boy to play for rehearsals and some services in exchange for lessons. Andy's future was defined. At the age of thirteen or fourteen, when his voice changed, Andy was kept on at the church playing organ accompaniment and some solo recitals. At 15 he was named organist and choirmaster at Trinity Church in Grantwood, N.J. – briefly- then formally named assistant organist at St. Thomas at sixteen, the youngest (still) in the church's history.[120]

TTN had enjoyed the avuncular presence of Everitt in his early life, making decisions for him and guiding him in the direction he thought best.[121] AT, like so many of the other boys at STC choir school, similarly believed and trusted in TTN's judgment to the point of allowing him to make important life decisions for him, whether or not they were the best solutions.[122] For AT, TTN recognised his talent and musical ability and sought to mould him to utilize his skills for the good of the Church and particularly STC. The intensity of TTN's influence convinced AT that he did not need to complete his formal academic education, despite his being offered excellent opportunities. As his wife's memoirs recollected: 'Dr Noble felt it unimportant and kept Andy working fulltime despite a scholarship offered by Trinity School.'[123] TTN's path for AT was similar to that of the tried and tested English cathedral organist's apprenticeship; something TTN did not follow.[124] The idea of the apprentice system was certainly in keeping with the early days of the American Guild of Organists' diploma certification, akin to the Royal College of Organists diplomas in England.[125] TTN was heavily involved in the founding of the AGO and the diploma programme, promoting it both in articles and interviews.[126]

AT's training as an organist began while he was a chorister, and all of his church musical background stemmed from TTN's leadership. After a successful tenure as Assistant Organist (1926-1935) he moved on from STC to become organist and choirmaster of St. Thomas Chapel (1935-1938), followed by All Angels Church (1938-1941). Again, his wife recalled 'At All Angels, Andy formed a choir with a large number of singers he trained for CBS broadcasts.'[127] AT's relationship with CBS grew from his successes over the airwaves, and following a broadcast of the Brahms [124] TTN was one of the first generations to obtain residential musical training, by attending the RCM Perhaps this suggests that he felt his education at the RCM was lacking and the old scheme was better suited for training organists.

[125] 'One way to study music at the practical level was to serve an apprenticeship to the organist and choirmaster of one of the great cathedrals. This led naturally of course to a life of music in the service of the Church; and in those days [mid- Nineteenth Century]there were few branches of the art of music in which a career of substance was more readily to be found in this country, provided that the musician could find himself in accord with this way of life.' (Thomas Henry Collinson, edited by Francis Collinson, The Diary of an Organist's Apprentice at Durham Cathedral 1871-1875, Aberdeen: The University Press, 1982, p. xvi).

[126] The New Music Review, 1932, pp. 348-350 (US-BUAGO). TTN felt that the training providing by these degrees was of importance. He stated in a musical journal, '[When asked] are these examinations worthwhile? My answer is emphatically, yes, when a high standard is maintained by candidates and examiners alike…It is quite possible to possess the degree of Mus. Bac. and even Mus. Doc., and yet be a very poor organist, but one holding the degree of Fellowship now-a-days must have passed through the fire and come out as a performer of some standing, for the examination is no child's play, but a severe all round test, so let us hope that a vast number more will each year enter themselves for examations.'

[127] TF, pp. 48-49. AT possessed a special skill for training choristers and he was sought after to train boys voices for concerts, broadcasts, and the like.

Ein Deutsches Requiem in 1942, he received a telephone call from the famous conductor, Leopold Stokowski (1882-1977) to employ AT to train a boy choir for one of his concerts,[128] and had a very successful career conducting choirs (both professional and volunteer) and playing organ concerts. AT's golden-boy status with CBS earned him the reputation of being the only organist they trusted to play live over the radio.[129] After his time in the army, AT was appointed Associate Organist at Trinity Church Wall Street and of St. Paul's Chapel, where he played noonday organ recitals three times a week and worked with the choir for Sunday service and special radio broadcasts. In 1947, he was honoured as a Fellow of Trinity College of Music, London, and he served on the National Council of the AGO.[130]

AT maintained his relationship with TTN, his mentor and teacher, for it was widely considered that he was one of TTN's most prized students - next to Grover Oberle and Paul Callaway.[131] TTN saw to it that AT had many opportunities afforded to him, well after his time at STC: this included a month-long journey to visit the great English cathedrals and meet the musicians and observe their work first-hand.[132] In the late 1940s, after TTN had retired from STC, AT invited TTN and MSN for dinner to meet his wife (Yolanda) and their two young children, Peter and Andrea. Yolanda later recalled the evening:

> Andy was delayed by a rehearsal. Peter, then teething, was howling in pain. I dropped a plate of appetizers on the glass-topped coffee table, breaking the glass. And a very heavy wind blew in a kitchen window. But the evening turned out to be a delight. Andy appeared soon after the Nobles arrived, Peter relaxed with some paregoric rubbed on his swollen gums, the broken glass was cleared away and the superintendant would replace the kitchen window the next morning. Meriel Noble was darling, saying "Tommy isn't this a wonderful little family? Such a lovely evening, such fun." Bless her.[133]

In 1953, the young Tietjen family faced a tragedy that bought sadness to the family and the musical community in New York. Following a rehearsal in March, AT became exceedingly ill and was brought home by a colleague, unable to function under his own steam. After a lengthy three-week stay in hospital, it was determined that AT was terminally ill with complications from a childhood injury, compounded by the treatment received for an illness during the Second World War. When AT was a boy, he was injured by an automobile, causing internal damage to his organs, particularly his kidneys. During the war, while stationed at Fort Jay, New York, he was given sulfa (sulfonamide), due to a severe case of the flu. Although the doctors cleared AT for service following this treatment, the sulfa exacerbated the previous damage to his kidney function. He was eventually discharged from the army, due to his medical conditions, including the need to have a kidney removed. His remaining kidney was the cause of the March 1953 hospitalization; it was failing. The doctors decided that dialysis, still a very new procedure, was not an option for AT, thus causing kidney failure.[134] On 13 April 1953, AT died, leaving a wife and two very small children.[135] His memory has been kept alive by his widow, Yolanda, who has written of AT's life in professional journals regarding church music in America and through her memoirs, Gatherings.[136]

4.12 TTN awarded Lambeth Degree

As TTN aged, many honours were bestowed upon him due to his successful career and the careers of his students, such as AT. In June of 1931, he received a letter from his old friend, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Cosmo Gordon Lang. TTN and Lang had long been associated since Lang's days as Archbishop of York, and he had in fact helped to encourage TTN to accept the offer from STC and move to the new world, bringing something of the 'old York to New York.'[137] Lang's letter, full of congratulations, also offered the honour of a Lambeth Degree:

My dear Noble,

I have been informed that you have just celebrated the Jubilee of your work as an Organist in the service of the Church, and in recognition of your long, valuable, and able services to the cause of Church Music, not least in both Old and New York, it would give me great satisfaction if I might exercise my Statutory right and confer upon you the Degree of Mus. Doc. What is known as a Lambeth Degree. This would entitle you according to custom to wear the Gown and Hood of an Oxford Mus. Doc. Degree. I ought in fairness to add that by Statute and custom the Fees for these Degrees are somewhat high. They amount in the case of a Mus. Doc. to about £60 to £70. I fear this might be a very burden to you but it occurs to me that if your friends knew of my wish they might be willing, as the friends of other men in similar circumstance have been willing, to defray the cost of these Fees as a sign of their appreciation of yourself and your work. Will you kindly let me know whether you would be willing to receive this Degree at my hands? If so, I am sorry that I shall not be able to confer it on you myself but I should probably ask the Bishop of New York to confer it upon you in some suitable way on my behalf.[138]

The Lambeth degree was set in place by the Peter's Pence Act of 1533, which:

…gave the Archbishop of Canterbury the power to grant academic degrees (previously carried out by the Pope). It allowed the Archbishop to override the requirements of the only two universities at the time, Oxford and Cambridge, and dispense candidates from residency and, in some cases, examination, at a time when it was difficult to travel to universities, often because of outbreaks of the plague…These degrees are full and 'real' degrees in that the recipient must have already done work worthy of the degree…This in practice is rarely the case; rather the award in music is made as a long-service medal to cathedral organists and composers.[139]

The case of long service was applicable to TTN, as was the ability to pass exams, if needed.[140] The church, also aware of this great milestone for TTN, remarked of special plans in a Vestry meeting:

The matter of marking in some appropriate way the fiftieth anniversary of T. Tertius Noble as an organist, which falls on Easter, 1931, was referred to the Music Committee with power, with the suggestion that Sunday March 15, 1931, be the day for the public celebration of the event. In connection with the 50th Anniversary of Dr. T. Tertius Noble as an organist, the questions of erecting a window directly over the organ on the north side of the Church, to perpetually mark this event, and the raising of the money necessary to pay for the same, was left with the Special Committee with power.[141]

Several weeks later:

The Rector was, on motion duly made and carried, authorized to enter into a contract with James Powell and Son of London, England, for the construction and installation of a window, the design of which has been submitted and approved by the Vestry, to mark the 50th Anniversary of Dr. Noble's life and work as an organist, at a cost not exceeding $15,000.[142]

TTN joyfully remarked:

As far as your organist and choirmaster is concerned, 1931 stood out as a wonderful year for, on March 15th of that year, his fiftieth anniversary as an organist was celebrated. On this occasion, the choir sang better than they could! As long as I am spared to carry on the musical work of this Church I shall always do all in my power to select and prepare music that is worthy for surely such a beautiful building as ours inspires one to do his best.[143]

The first decade of the choir school saw many successes and changes. From the struggle to found the school, to new locations and expansions of the buildings and infrastructure, to the appointment of various headmasters, the establishment of endowments, and the change of rectors, TTN was at the helm, guiding what he believed to be an English cathedral music programme through changing times. A rhythm had been established, nevertheless, and a feeling of security was enjoyed, although internal squabbles between priest and musician were escalating.

The late 1930s were to bring about trying times for him as Brooks's hold on the parish tightened, and he faced the decision of possibly leaving his beloved STC. In the larger world, Adolf Hitler rose to power and once again the world was brought to its knees in a second world war with Germany, one which would inevitably touch upon the existence of STC.

CHAPTER FIVE

Come Labour On, 1936-1953

5.1 TTN's domestic life, character and relationships

For all the adulation and respect TTN accrued at STC, and the recognition he enjoyed in terms of his relationships with his choristers, at home his domestic relationship with his only child, Philip Raymond Noble, was more turbulent. PRN was but ten years of age when his father accepted the post of organist and choirmaster of STC in NYC. TNN's and MSN's's relationship with their only child was caring and protective, much like any parent's.[1] However, what is clear is that TTN spent much of his life raising hundreds of boys as a choirmaster, increasing the amount of time he spent away from his family and thus from his son.[2] The irony, then, was that, though he was accustomed to dealing with the young, he was unable to relate satisfactorily to his progeny. A general neglect of his son paradoxically gave rise to unrealistic expectations.[3] Through the eyes of PRN, whose relationship with his father was anything but straightforward, one is able to gain a broader and more complex understanding of TTN as a man and a somewhat inattentive father. Moreover, this perspective also uncovers a private and personal life that extended beyond the public face of TTN's life as an organist and choirmaster, and one not readily witnessed by the general population.

The wife was at home…she promised that Mr. Noble would call me up…A choir of men and boys to train affords another outlet for Mr. Noble's activities. His wife [shook] her head at the number of engagements, but he doesn't worry. He seems to thrive on them.'

[3] Philip Noble was sent away to St. Luke's School for Boys in Wayne, Pennsylvania after the Nobles arrived in New York. A series of letters between Philip and his mother and father began in circa 1917 and continued until his graduation from the school in 1921.

Several aspects of TTN's private persona were alluded to by Yolanda Tietjen-Fitzgerald (Andrew Tietjen's widow) in chapter four. She spoke of his controlling nature and pompous attitude, due in part, in her mind, to his over-compensation as a small-statured man.[4] While humorous, TF's perspective, as the wife of TTN's assistant organist, was naturally biased and has to be considered in a wider perspective, not least because one can safely assume that the wife of TTN's employee would not think kindly of the man who had more control over her husband than she had.[5] The primary concerns voiced by TF centred around her frustrations pertaining to TTN's air of superiority, and her perceived mistreatment of others under his supervision.[6] The life of a cathedral organist (or the STC organist, in this case) was often filled with difficulties and pressures, and TTN, being a product of the English cathedral training system, had a social duty outside his musical responsibilities. This was manifested in a desire by TTN to exhibit gentlemanly behaviour which bore a strong sense of self-importance and social entitlement (following, perhaps, Stanford's example). His education from the RCM, and his subsequent training in Cambridge, made him a gentleman by association, yet, in his case, it was most certainly not by birth.[7] TF, nevertheless, felt that MSN was the calming and gentle spirit that guided her husband's constitution behind the scenes.[8] She was often left alone while TTN travelled to play recitals or guest-conduct music festivals, and in her long-suffering devotion, she bore her duty happily in the service of her husband and the church; although she could be lonely at times.[9] MSN was enthusiastic and committed to the success of the school and the music programme of

STC; she delighted in its progress as much as her husband,[10] yet her husband's habitual absence created for MSN a life similar to her childhood, and a position similar to her mother's, as the wife of a priest and bishop - an existence to which she was in one sense accustomed, yet also one which was an emotional and social challenge.[11]

TTN fulfilled his duties as husband and father by providing materially for his family; he was known for his frugal ways to the point of being parsimonious, which spilled over into other aspects of his life, especially in regard to negotiating church finances.[12] TF recalled several instances of AT playing the organ for funerals or weddings (often for lesser members of society), and, upon collection of the fees, TTN insisting all money be paid to him, leaving to him (somewhat autocratically) the decision of whether or not to distribute the earnings to those working on his behalf. Assuming such a domineering position, he viewed somewhat imperiously those who deputised for him as extensions of himself. In addition - perhaps as a manifestation of his inner insecurity - he was sensitive, even oversensitive, to his title and position and felt his assistants should never assume authority that was not rightfully theirs, even though, in essence, they were doing his job.[13] This type of behaviour was part of a somewhat artificial, hierarchical game, to which the rules were often unspoken or non-existent.[14] Fostering personal interactions such as this, in no doubt, coloured the way in which TTN viewed himself in relationship to [11] See ch. 1, p. 19. It is quite possible that Mrs Stubbs's initial objection to TTN marrying her daughter was not only based on social standing, but her need of a companion in her life who was not so closely 'wedded' to his duty to the church.

[12] TTN was fortunate to enjoy the comforts of an English cathedral way of life (even in America), having a home provided by the church (in this case, at the choir school), sparing him the expenses incurred by those not under the purview of the church.

others, in particular, his own son. There were many tacit rules in regard to conduct and life in general, which were part of the social atmosphere of the aspiring classes during the time period. Many social barriers became fluid following the war, and likewise, TTN, being part of a more elevated social establishment such as STC, was keenly aware of the changes.[15]

Through frequent written correspondence between PRN and his parents, TTN and his wife cared for and directed PRN's well-being, without ever being physically present. PRN was from a different background than the other boys attending St. Luke's School, due in large part to the cultural differences of his birth. Many of life's difficult moments were handled at a distance, in writing, rather than a face-to-face interaction between parents and child.[16] Surprisingly, and perhaps paradoxically, TTN found it more beneficial and amenable to mould the boys in the choir school by his presence, yet he advised and attended to his own son indirectly through letters.[17] The interaction between PRN, who seems to have become a maladjusted personality, and his parents, was clearly awkward. Rather than engendering a sense of resilience by his separation from them at boarding school, this increased his dependence upon them such that he was unable to learn how to make simple decisions for himself.[18] This was almost certainly due to his father's domineering personality (and was quite probably due to TTN's own background as a 'fatherless' mentoree of Everitt). Letters recounting PRN's difficulties with other boys were written when he was seventeen years of age - a strange course of action for a teenager at this juncture of his life. Indeed, the tone and contents of the surviving correspondence are more suggestive of a situation TTN might have encountered with junior members of the choir, rather than with his almost adult-aged son.[19]

PRN was exposed to a first-class education at St Luke's, yet, unfortunately, he was not an academic young man.[20] This was difficult for his father to accept, because it reminded him all too vividly of his own difficulties in learning:

> If Mr Reynolds [PRN's master] says much more I shall lose my temper, and write to him and tell him exactly what I think of him- don't take the slightest notice of his sarcasm…do your work greatly. You have plenty of brains, but you may take after me, for at your age, I was slow to grasp things…in all probability, Mr Reynolds is very anxious for you to do well…my master was very impatient too, and made me out to be the biggest fool ever created, and lectured me on the subject for hours at a stretch![21]

When the time came for PRN to submit applications for universities, he applied to Yale, Harvard, Oxford, Princeton, and the University of Pennsylvania.[22] Several letters were returned to him commenting on the quality of his St Luke's School admission grades: 'My dear Sir: I am very sorry indeed to inform you that a grade of 59 in Latin is not sufficiently high to be regarded as a passing mark. 60 is the lowest passing grade.'[23] Several other letters from Yale and Oxford are extant, all commonly alluding to his unacceptable grades for university admission.[24] TTN was perplexed that his son could not excel in his schooling, particularly in subjects that were at the forefront of the choir-school curriculum. TTN spoke of this dilemma to EMS, and following his correspondence with his friend and rector, he wrote to PRN:

> …I had a chat with him [EMS] last week about Harvard. He tells me that it would be much better for you to go up in 1922 instead of 1921. You would be then 19 and 3 months- and would be able to appreciate University life much better. He thinks it is a great mistake for any man to go up before he is 19, this of course, will give you another year for preparation, which is a fine thing.[25]

PRN was eventually accepted at Princeton University (year unknown), where, after only two years (of a four-year degree), he removed himself from academic studies and returned to New York to live with his parents in their choir-school apartment. There is little other documented knowledge of his formal education other than another brief stint, this time, at Harvard, and an article found in the Princeton Alumni Journal, published at the time of PRN's death:

Philip Noble attended Princeton for two years, leaving to teach in his father's school at St. Thomas Church. Phil then studied music and other subjects at Harvard. By 1936 he had become an "extensive itinerant," travelling the United States as a professional lecturer with slides and colored movies, rare in those days. It was a time when audiences delighted in a speaker with a British accent.[26]

Even during his time at Harvard in the 1930s, PRN struggled to receive high marks in music and other subjects.[27] During the 1927-1928 school year, while living with his parents, he joined the staff of the choir school, under the then headmaster, Clair J. Smith.[28] His duties were not clearly defined other than brief mentions of his work with the choirboys in the subject of English literature. By 1929, he no longer worked in the school.[29]

Since his childhood, PRN had possessed a strong interest in photography and, while at St Luke's, his parents purchased for him a professional quality camera.[30] In later life, he became well known for his black-and-white and colour photography, winning awards for his landscapes, particularly of homes and gardens. He was often asked to speak and give presentations on his travels, due in part to the new and interesting perspectives he provided.[31] His gravitation toward an extreme focus and talent in one area, coupled with his social awkwardness and learning difficulties, made everyday life troublesome and overwhelming. TF spoke of his shyness and fear of his father, often clinging to his mother, and his unwillingness to function outside the family home. She described him as 'weak and highly underdeveloped.'[32]

An instance of PRN sparring with his father was recalled by TTN's assistant organist, Frank McConnell (1941-1943), who served during TTN's final years. PRN would have been between thirty-eight and forty years of age:

> Dr. Noble had written an organ piece and inscribed it to me [Frank McConnell]. Its title "Legend" and its mood quite nostalgic. I think it tells rather a poignant story. Phil was in a pixieish mood one evening and ribbed his dad about this piece. He found the music too sequential, and making far too much use of a triplet figure. He named some Wagnerian scene of which it reminded him. He also ribbed his dad about editing a Bach Prelude and Fugue recently, accusing him of rubbing elbows with the great to his own advantage. To my relief Dr. Noble accepted Phil's ribbing with good grace. No tension resulted.[33]

The undercurrent in McConnell's statement - 'no tension resulted' - suggested that, on other occasions, there were tense exchanges between father and son which would have been disquieting or embarrassing to witness. He must have known PRN's personality well enough to comment with authority on his various moods. The pompous and ambitious attitude mentioned by TF is echoed in PRN's statement, teste McConnell, of TTN's 'rubbing elbows with the great to his own advantage.'

The challenge of PRN's inability to complete his university education and begin a career for himself were disappointing, although, in time, he was able to find success through photography (or cinematography - which, at that time, were new art forms) and by associating himself with his father's fame in America and abroad. PRN never married, and remained in the family's Rockport home (built in 1931 by TTN for retirement) until his death in 1979 at seventy-five years of age.[34] The written correspondence with his parents, and the vicarious association with his father's illustrious career, became a main source of companionship in his later life.

After the death of his parents (TTN in 1953 and Meriel in 1958) PRN became the caretaker of the Rockport home on Old Garden Road, as well as curator of TTN's professional documents, including original manuscripts of published and unpublished works. Throughout the 1960s and 1970s, he gradually deposited some of his father's personal archives in the Dean and Chapter Library in York, England.[35] Following his death, the remainder of the possessions and the house were willed to St. Mary's Episcopal Church in Rockport where TTN was organist for most of the final decade of his life.[36]

5.2 TTN's influence on church music in the United States

The influence of TTN upon church music in the United States, through his post at STC, was widely felt, drawing praise and admiration; setting the standard for musical excellence in churches of various denominational backgrounds.[37] His methods of operation were successful, and due to the exposure of radio broadcasts; travelling to play organ recitals; and his compositions, he garnered an even wider and appreciative audience. One such opinion article in the New York Times spoke of the boy choirs in New York:

[37] 'In America you were soon recognised as the Dean of ecclesiastical musicians and composers. This made me very proud. Indeed, during our twelve years of happy association, a great privilege for me, you were an infinite comfort to me in every part of my ministry. Your quick, sympathetic understanding, your reverent and radiant, strong and masterly spirit made your organ a truly celestial choir. We shall not hear the like again from any other person.' (Letter from EMS to TTN, 23 June 1943, MS US-BUAGO).

Sir, - I have been much interested in your correspondents' observations regarding the boys choirs of New York. However, I fail to see why comparison of New York choirs should be made. I have no desire to add to the number of critics and judges. The purpose of this letter is to state that the authorities of St. Thomas's Church, New York, did a splendid thing for Church music, boy voice-culture, and Church musicians when they appointed Dr. Tertius Noble from York Minster to St. Thomas's. As a man, composer of Church music, solo organist, conductor, and choirmaster, he has been an enormous success. If there are others like him in England, there is plenty of room and demand for them in the U.S.A. The choir of St. Thomas's, New York, is regarded as a model in this great country. I visit my native land, England, every year, and I have long ago come to the conclusion that there is need for waking up the music in English Cathedral and parish churches. The word 'dead' describes much of it very fully. It is a dangerous characteristic of the rut that few of us know when we are in it. We have plenty of 'organ grinders' in America. We need expert choirmasters and all-round musicians for our church posts.[38]

TTN was fearless in his criticism of what he deemed as bad church music, touting his ever-valiant battle cry for only the best music possible.[39] This montre became a part of his career from the early days in England, and through his work on hymnal committees and national church level boards, his voice was seen as a strong tone of reason and experience.[40] Speaking in relation to church music of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, he echoed a view inherited from the Victorians and one that was certainly prevalent during his early days at Trinity College:

Judging from long experience in English Cathedrals, where I played for twenty years, I have no hesitation in saying that music of it is not worthy of a place in our services…I cannot help feeling that much of it [sixteenth and seventeenth centuries] is deadly dull…It is quite true that a vast amount of rubbish has found its way into our services…we all know of the sugary, sickly, sentimental anthem that sells in thousands; alas, many compositions of this type are greatly enjoyed by the congregation!

TTN continues, in regard to "bad" hymns:

Here are just a few tunes that many of us would never miss:
"He leadeth Me"
"Blest be the tie that binds"
"Rock of Ages"
"Jesus Calls Us"

And last of all, Barnby's tune to "For all the Saints." This tune does not fit the words and for that reason especially I have always disliked it. When that superb unison tune appeared, written by one of the great musicians of today, Dr. Ralph Vaughan Williams, I hailed it as a great gift to the world…and it is becoming very popular in this country.[41]

TTN also held strong opinions about conducting church choirs, particularly in regard to the visibility of the choirmaster during the liturgy.

> When we [York Minster Choir] are doing anything especially intricate, I take my place among the tenors and basses and direct quietly from there. I know men, of course, who do otherwise; the organist of Durham Cathedral [Rev. Arnold D. Culley] for instance, conducts from the centre of the chancel.[42]

The implication here is that, for TTN, a central conductor was not entirely appealing, because it was too conspicuous. It was, however, a particularly trenchant issue for him, not least because of the musical exigencies involved. During the construction of STC, he complained specifically, not to say indignantly, about the width of the chancel and the distance of the choir stalls being too great, and the negative musical consequences this would have on the choir and its sense of ensemble.[43] Moreover, it was because of the distance of Decani and Cantoris that he avoided conducting from the centre of the chancel.

For many years, the choir broadcasted Brahms's Ein Deutsches Requiem on Good Friday, and due to its immense coast-to-coast success, the National Broadcasting Corporation (NBC) requested that the choir make a permanent commitment to broadcasting from their studios every year.[44] Magazines, journals and newspapers called for interviews with TTN, and even sent reviewers to hear the choir. A practice such as this had, heretofore, only been reserved for the opera and professional concerts:

[43] In regard to distance between the choir stalls, 'the beautiful carved woodwork, given by Charles Steele, was being installed in the chancel. To my [TTN's] dismay I found that the architect, Bertram Goodhue, whose mastery of the gothic style was challenging in its beauty, nevertheless failed to understand the placing of the choir stalls from the standpoint of the trained and experienced musician. In the architect's design the choir stalls were so far apart that it would have been difficult for the decani and cantoris sides of the choir to have heard each other singing. I drew Dr Stires's attention to this matter and immediately a meeting was called to discuss the problem. Goodhue naturally did not like my idea because he said that if the stalls were placed closer to each other than the original plan, it would upset the entire architectural balance of the church. I pointed out that the main purpose of the choir stalls was for the choir, and that they should be placed in such a manner that wou1d not hinder but add to the beauty of the singing.' St. Thomas Church with its awe inspiring beauty of architecture; its glorious four manual Skinner organ; and its marvelous choir whose work fairly sends chills racing up and down the backs of listeners from all over the world.[45]

The groundswell of popularity made securing excellent boys for the choir school an easier task than in the early days.[46] Clarence Bodine, of Flemington, NJ was one of the boys selected for the choir in November of 1937, an accomplishment worthy of the local newspaper headlines.[47] Bodine had a successful career as a chorister (November 1937 - February 1940), although he was never selected as a solo boy.[48] As part of this higher public profile, TTN adopted a policy of personal 'pastoral care' and took great care to communicate with the parents of his choristers, particularly when their time in the school would draw to a close. This was demonstrable in the case of Bodine when his voice was about to break:

[Dear Mrs. Bodine]From my last report you probably guessed that Clarence's voice is going fast. I am truly sorry for this, but alas, it happens all the time. Clarence is a fine boy and he has been most loyal, and of late has taken a very deep interest in everything connected with the school. It will be best for Clarence to do very little singing now, as his voice is very unsettled. He will remain with us till the end of the first part of term, the end of January. After that it will be best for him to go to High School in Flemington.[49]

TTN did allow some boys to act as crucifers or sing lower parts in the choir after their voices began to change.[50] This often happened when voices began to change early in the school year. However, in the cases of boys who lacked only a few months until their graduation, he would send them on, in order to make room for those waiting to enter the school. In TTN's days, once your singing-voice began to change, and was deemed 'broken', your usefulness to the choir and school became less important. Additionally:

> Space in the 1930s school was limited, and turn-over was necessary. The Rector reported on his recent visit to the Choir School that he found everything in excellent condition, that four or five boys would graduate this June and that Dr. Noble had a list of fifty applicants for the vacant positions.[51]

Steele, perpetually proud of his investment, was delighted with the popularity of the school, particularly in its competitive enrollment. In 1934, approximately nine years after his generous stock endowment gift, he decided to reorganize some of the securities, to yield an even greater profit to produce high returns for the choir school. In a letter to Brooks, he stated:

> …these various changes and additions have cost me about $230,000, and I sincerely hope that the account can now go on providing sufficient income to run the School. You will remember they now bring about $18,000 yearly, and there has been no reduction of salaries or expenses during the depression. Perhaps the Committee will think it advisable to do something about this.[52]

Ever the advocate for TTN and the school, Steele, in his letter, gently prompted the rector properly to compensate the worthy work of the choir school staff, particularly TTN, with an increase in salary. The detail shown by mentioning the additional personal cost to him in rearranging the funds was intended to encourage compliance with Steele's wishes.

With the school's operating finances renewed for the future, the headmaster, Benham, turned his energy towards securing the boys' academic careers after their graduation from the choir school. He sought to continue their gentlemanly upbringing with financial scholarships to attend elite boarding schools for their high school and college educations. Benham made an appeal in the Year Book of 1930 and again in 1931:

> … in 1930 the need was mentioned for the establishment of a competitive scholarship whereby able and ambitious boys requiring financial assistance might be aided in their post-Choir School education and be encouraged at the same time in their work here as choristers. Each passing year emphasized this need. May I urge consideration of it upon those who are interested in the great work which the parish is doing for boys and who would like to see the influence of the Choir School further extended in a tangible, worthy and far-reaching manner?[53]

[52] Letter from Steele to Brooks, 6 December 1934, as recorded in the VM pp. 76-77.

Benham was wise to see the future impact this could have on the school. Strong and secure futures for the boys made for good careers, and good careers made for men with well-paid jobs, which, in turn, created grateful alumni who benevolently and munificently contributed to the school.[54]

On 7 May 1933, the Assistant Rector, the Rev. Harold L. Gibbs died unexpectedly; he was forty years of age.[55] Gibbs was popular with the choir and Benham saw this as an opportunity to benefit the choir school. Upon speaking with Brooks, he convinced the rector of the need to designate the memorials to the choir school:

> Rarely has a man of forty touched the live of so many, young and old alike, as did Mr. Gibbs. It was fitting that a fund, to be known as "The Harold Leslie Gibbs Memorial Scholarship Fund," be raised by voluntary subscription to perpetuate his memory, the income to be used to continue the education of outstanding graduates of our Choir School, since the choir boys were beloved by him.[56]

In reply, Benham remarked on this extraordinary gift:

> The acquisition of these funds constitutes a very great forward step in our history. It is to be hoped that additions through gifts are made to these endowments, a growing number of able and ambitious boys may find it possible to complete their education in other schools.[57]

TTN and Benham were prudent to realize that, in order to obtain the best possible boys for the school, the offering of an incentive which would extend past their time in the choir school and which could change their future position in life, was highly appealing to parents, especially when faced with the decision of sending a child away to a boarding school. The school's raison d'être was to provide the church with music of a professional standard, but Benham knew that, in order to survive as a reputable certified school, the scholastic success of the institution needed to broaden in terms of its academic curriculum and improve in terms of teaching quality.[58]

Additionally, Benham wrote directly to the parish, promoting an article on education, in order that it might have a better understanding of his goals:

> Much is heard at the present time about the "aims of modern education", as though the fundamentals of a good education had greatly changed in recent years. Should not these aims still be, very briefly, to make "gentleman and scholars" and to awaken in the individual the desire to be a useful member of society?...If you wish to judge the Choir School by what it has accomplished since its inception in 1918 [sic], you have only to examine the list of its graduates who are now in preparatory school and college, or who have reached positions of usefulness in business and the professions.[59]

5.3 Governance of the Choir School

The educational system for the choirboys at York, which TTN had been responsible for reconstituting in 1902, had many similarities to the evolution of the STC choir school. By the transplanting and careful adaptation of his successes there, the STC choir school grew in many of the same ways, although with a more modern academic focus (see chapter two). In 1939 (after twenty years of operation), due to the popularity of the school and the post-choir school educational scholarships, the vestry set forth the following rules and regulations:

> Rules for Distribution of Choir School Scholarships
> 1. Not more than one quarter of income from scholarship funds shall be granted to one boy each year.
> 2. In case there is not a suitable or worthy candidate, no award shall be made.
> 3. Unused balances shall be added to the principal.
> 4. Money shall be paid directly to school to be attended.
> 5. The parents, relative or friends of the candidate must signify their willingness and ability to supply whatever funds may be needed over and above the scholarship.
> 6. Selection shall be made on basis of character, loyalty as a member of the Choir and School, leadership and ability in athletics. Candidates must have attained satisfactory grades in school work during his stay in the school and a grade of at least 75% for the last year in all subjects requiring examination for entrance to preparatory school.
> 7. Candidate shall be selected at the end of each year by vote of Choir School Staff and recommended to the Rector of St. Thomas Church.
> 8. Candidate must have been a student in the Choir School for at least two years.
> 9. Boys who leave the Choir School in the middle of the year because of change of voice and with honorable dismissal are eligible for scholarship aid.
> 10. Candidates must make application for scholarship by February first of each year.
> 11. School attended must have recognized standing.
> 12. The holder of a scholarship must maintain an acceptable standing in the school to be attended.
> 13. The Headmaster of the Choir School shall follow preparatory school careers and report to Rector from time to time.
> 14. Transfers from one prep school to another not barred.
> 15. No scholarship aid granted beyond preparatory school.
> 16. Announcement of successful candidate shall be made at Commencement each year.
> 17. The Vestry reserves the right to alter, modify or withdraw these rules at any time.[60]

[59] PYB 1935, p. 32.
[60] VM 1939, p. 100.

However, the fact that the vestry vied for control over school governance was cause for concern. Until this point, Benham and TTN were allowed total control over decisions regarding the choir school, in particular, the expenditure of funds specifically reserved for the school. The church had separated its financial responsibilities and oversight from the choir school in 1923.[61] The vestry and rector felt, perhaps, that too much attention and money was being given to a school where the focus was becoming more academic than musical.[62] The vestry and finance committee, one year earlier, had also taken steps to limit the autonomy of TTN and Benham:

> …further regulation regarding expenditures to be monitored and controlled by the financial secretary [and vestry] include:
> 1. Salaries paid to the choir men by Dr. Noble from the monthly appropriation.
> 2. The costs of food, salaries and other expenses, as presently paid by Mrs. Atwater [Housemother] in connection with the choir school, from the monthly appropriation of [the] Charles Steele Fund.
> 3. The fund of $75.00 received from each choir boy for certain expenditures. This fund is now being handled by the Headmaster, Mr. Benham.[63]

William Weigle (former chorister) spoke of the care that TTN and all the adults displayed toward the boys, and in particular, how they prepared the boys to enter the next phase of their education. Weigle, through the generosity of the scholarships available at STC, attended the Choate School in Wallingford, Connecticut. Following his time at Choate, he served in the United States military during the Second World War. Weigle believed STC choir school helped prepare him for combat in Europe, due to the thorough training he received as a member of the choir.[64]

[62] The choir still only sang on Sundays. Also, the rector made every effort to assure the parish that money was being carefully spent during the depression years, 'Notwithstanding the depression has reduced our income, necessitating a readjustment of expenditures and changes in the staff of workers, our work has gone forward without incurring a deficit or a lessening of activities.' (PYB 1938, pg. 11) While the church budget was tightened, the choir school was still operating from the gifts of Steele. The rector was keenly aware of this imbalance of riches, as it were.

[64] Interview with William Weigle (Great Barrington, Massachusetts, 3 June 2013). The Choate School is a famous (now co-educational) school in the United States. Many notables have attended including former President John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

In September 1940, the Nazis began bombing the city of London. Benham and TTN knew that the emotions of the nation were on high alert, and with the vestry tightening its influence over spending and authority, political posturing became necessary. In order to avoid a similar reaction to the expenditure of funding for the choir and its school (as was experienced at the inception of the school in 1919), Benham, took the opportunity to address the parish in 1941, stating:

> The investment of so much effort and money in the choir school yields richer dividends with each succeeding year. We now have an alumni body of slightly less than two hundred, who are beginning to assume important positions in the life of our country. At least twenty are in the Army and Navy of the United States.
> Since this is a school for young boys, it is not likely that our enrollment will be lessened, or our work disrupted, by the war. Let us hope that this will be so, and that we may be permitted to go on building for the future through this school, whose importance in education, both musical and academic, is so well recognized by the people of St. Thomas Church.[65]

5.4 Brooks and his relationship with STC and the choir school

While internal battles of control between the church and school were being fought, the daily religious function and purpose of STC migrated toward a more sacramental and high-church orientation. Following the depression, the years of political unrest in Europe, and the subsequent entering of another world war, Brooks sought to make STC a resource for those looking to find solace during such unsettled times. Chorally, STC did not a mirror an English cathedral schedule (the choir still only sang Evensong on Sundays), the daily rota of liturgies, though, had increased substantially since EMS became bishop in 1925.[66] In 1936, the vestry, at the insistence of the rector, instituted daily Holy Communion in the church. Brooks remarked:

[65] PYB 1941, p. 40. STC also took part in a national television broadcast of a service entitled, Bundles for Britain. This liturgy featured prayers and the laying of gifts for the British people at the altar of the church. (see worldwide website https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=by7DQf0aviE, accessed 26 September 2014).

[66] From TTN's arrival in 1913, throughout the course of EMS's rectorate, there were no weekday services. All services were on Sundays and consisted of alternating Morning Prayer with Holy Communion (PYBs 1913-1925).

We inaugurated a plan for daily Communion and Noon-day Services, and emphasized the importance of a great noonday service with special preachers during Lent. These services, with their ever growing congregations, show that they meet a need and have proven their worth beyond a question of a doubt. We have stressed the service of Holy Communion as the centre around which the life of the Church and her members revolves, and the response of our people to the claim of the Sacrament is strong proof of the vitality of the Church's ministry in this day of change. Though to all intents and purposes, we are now a so-called downtown parish, our usefulness as a witness to the Faith in Jesus Christ may not be questioned when during the past year the congregations totaled nearly seventy thousand, or an average of thirteen hundred and fifty persons per week, making no allowance for the summer months, when of necessity the congregations are smaller. So much for the spiritual life of the Parish.[67]

A graduate of Columbia and General Theological Seminary in New York, Brooks was 'sound in the faith and not a man of complicated personality, he was regarded as a 'Central Churchman' (the equivalent of 'Broad' in Church of England parlance) and therefore, treading the via media, was held in high regard by the leaders of both Anglo-Catholics and Liberal Evangelicals.[68] 'He was,' as Wright put it, 'a strategist, able to take long views and to pursue his ends with great resolution.' [69]

During his tenure, Brooks concentrated his energy in two directions - to elevate the importance of the sacrament [of the Eucharist] in the life of STC, and to increase the endowment of the church. The sacramental focus had no direct bearing on the music of the church; rather, in some ways it pre-empted any institution of a daily choral office, such as evensong [as was TTN's goal]. Daily noon communion for Brooks was seen as central to the well-being of the church, and served as the catalyst for bringing others to religion:

[68] J. Robert Wright, Saint Thomas Church Fifth Avenue (Grand Rapids: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Co. 2001) p. 156. A further reflection on Brooks's schooling and training as a priest: 'Roelif Hasbrouck Brooks…although a weak, puny mortal with molasses colored curls, yet by the aid of Mellin's Food he was able to pull through. From his very birth he seemed to be cut out for the Church, and his chanting in different keys was famed far and wide in his own immediate neighborhood…While in Columbia the "Parson," to offset the enlivening influences of college life, has been engaged in mission work on Long Island, where it might be said he is more favorably known than among us. In politics he is a Republican dyed in the wool, and believes in the retention of the Philippines and everything else Uncle Sam can get his hands on. As to religion, the "Parson" is a Churchman, and after graduation will enter the General Theological Seminary to study for Holy Orders. He is an ardent lover of nature as displayed in the gentler sex, and he most assuredly does not believe in celibacy.' (The Naughty-Naughtian Columbia University Class of 1900, New York, 1900).

…we [the people of STC] do maintain that our experience at St. Thomas shows that there is an increasing interest in religion, and this is evidenced by the continued growth of the congregations and especially in the number of those who derive help and comfort through their participation in the Sacrament of Holy Communion.[70]

The earlier statement, made with regard to Brook's being a strategist, leads one to several significant conclusions about his relationship with TTN. Brooks undertook much to secure financial stability in his desire for endowments.[71] Thus, with this focus in mind (which essentially was 'bricks and mortar', rather than art and beauty), he was ever mindful of the costs associated with TTN's constant pursuit of the finest church music and how this might act as a brake on those other factors to which he wanted to observe forward momentum. The annoyance came in the fact that as the school's enrollment increased, Brooks exacted more and more from TTN in terms of the immediate attention required to meet the regulations laid down by the vestry; moreover, Brooks also heightened the expectations and co-operation he desired of his choirmaster.

A large expenditure, at TTN's insistence, was devoted to the reworking of the choir room, originally placed on the ground floor along Fifty-Third Street (the so-called L shaped room) which had prompted WM's resignation, and had consequently become TTN's office. The chorister's weekday rehearsals occurred at the school, and, until this point, the full practice on Friday evenings was held in the Guild Room in the Parish House on Fifth Avenue.[72] With the frustration of lacking a permanent musical rehearsal room at the church, TTN convinced the vestry to create a space formed by excavating the crypt of the church.

[71] PYB 1937, p. 13: 'No sooner had your Rector taken up his work here ten years ago than he was impressed by the lack of an adequate Endowment Fund for the Parish…Ten years ago our total endowment amounted to $613, 196.54 of which the income of only $38,696.42 was for the support of the Parish. On December 31, 1936, the total of the Endowment Funds amounted to $1,708,906.05, an increase in principal amount of $1,095,709.51, of which $674,084.64 is for the support of the Parish. This is the result of keeping the need of an Endowment Fund before the congregation.'
[72] Interview with John Scott, May 2013. Dr. Scott is the incumbent musician of St. Thomas, having arrived from St. Paul's London in 2004 to succeed Dr. Gerre Hancock.

The music committee reported that the New Choir Room in the Crypt made possible by the generous gift of $2000 by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dodson [of the music committee] had been completed and was now in use much to the satisfaction of Dr. Noble and the members of the choir.[73]

The number of boarding choirboys in 1938 totalled over forty.[74] Space for this number of boarders was addressed in 1937, when Steele, after his financial enhancement of 1932, yet again extended his generosity to the school.

the authority [was] given the Rector and Vestry by our Senior Warden, Mr. Charles Steele, for the erection of an addition to the Choir School to embody a Study Hall and three Class Rooms and to make use of "The Kate L. Adams Fund" for the installation of a fully equipped gymnasium. Property in the rear of the present school building, consisting of a lot fifty feet wide and one hundred feet deep, facing on West 56th street, was purchased at a cost of $75,000…In view of removal of the class rooms from the old building to the new, which will permit enlarged dormitory facilities, ten additional boys have already been admitted to the Choir, making forty boys now in residence. When the new building is completed we shall have a Choir School equal to anything in this country and comparable to the best that may be found anywhere abroad. All this is due to the benefaction of one man - Mr. Charles Steele.[75]

Authority of the curriculum and the daily functioning of the choir school was primarily in the hands of Benham, TTN and the music committee, although, as expressed earlier, with regard to scholarships, Brooks took the opportunity to intervene and thereby tighten his grip in terms of overall authority.[76] In 1938, the music committee consisted of Steele and Harris Fahnestock, following the death of Robert Dodson in that year, and the previous death of William Truesdale in 1935.[77] Fahnestock had long been a warden of the parish, and of great importance during the construction of the Cram building following the 1905 fire.[78] (The Great Reredos, soaring some eighty feet above the high altar of the church became a memorial to the Fahnestocks, given by their children.[79]) The importance of the music committee and its authority had been a crucial resource for TTN to exercise and realize his vision, especially when EMS was rector. However, with the committee now consisting of only one original member, TTN's position was more tenuous than before. The music committee had been involved in most of the operating affairs from the beginning of his tenure. It had advised and consulted on matters ranging from organ maintenance contracts to the oversight of paid singers in the back rows (alto, tenor, bass) of the choir.[80] Such a process and 'devolution' of power had been TTN's experience a similar at York and Ely, with Dean and Chapter having oversight in such matters.[81] Yet, in America, TTN had significantly greater sway over the committee of his peers and he enjoyed complete autonomy over almost all choir affairs including the choice of music, in contrast to the cathedral protocol of consulting the Succentor or Precentor before compilation and confirmation of the music lists. He always maintained total control over the selection of the choral repertoire and hymns, and Brooks publicly praised him for his expertise, while in private, he was working to undermine his credibility with the vestry.[82] In fact, it is unclear if TTN ever invited the music committee to become involved in the making of decisions, or if, due to the friendships between the original men of the committee, such decisions conceivably evolved out of a natural interest in the unique endeavours TTN brought to STC. By Brooks's time, the series of checks and balances in place with the committee were compulsory, and the rector maneuvered the committee as an instrument for his own agendas regarding music and TTN's position.

Brooks, with whom I worked for eight years after Dr. Stires was made Bishop of Long Island, as saying, 'I have never been able to understand why a clergyman should ever concern himself with the music selected for his services when he had a well-trained organist and choirmaster. The average minister of religion IS not trained in music - I know I am not - and for him to meddle with matters of which he is ignorant is little short of folly."… As far as the choice of music was concerned, I was very fortunate in my two rectors at St Thomas. Both Dr Stires and Dr Brooks were broad-minded in their conception of the meaning of music in the church service, leaving all major decisions up to me.'

5.5 STC and the Death of Charles Steele

In the summer of 1939, a sobering reality occurred when TTN's friend, and one remaining stronghold on the music committee and vestry, died:

> While I [TTN] was spending my summer holiday in Santa Monica, California in 1939, I received a telegram from the Sexton of St Thomas church informing me that Charles Steele had passed on and that he had requested that I play at his funeral. He had also asked that my Souls of the Righteous should be performed at the service. The same afternoon that I received the wire, I made arrangements to fly immediately to the East Coast, where I performed with a heavy heart my sad duties. With the passing of Charles Steele I lost a great friend. Though I continued my work at St Thomas for another four years, things were never as they were when the music's distinguished benefactor had been alive.[83]

With Steele's death, TTN's comment, 'things [were] never the same,' was for him, unfortunately, a grim and unpalatable reality. TTN was seventy years of age when Steele died and the two men had enjoyed twenty-six fruitful years together, building one of the finest music programmes in North America. The death of his comrade was to have more challenging consequences for the choir and TTN personally than might have at first been imagined.

Steele's death was national news. One report spoke of TTN's flying from California (where he was on a recital tour) to provide the music for the service:

> Dr. Noble flies from coast to play the organ selections requested by Financier. Funeral service for Charles Steele, a partner of J. P. Morgan and Co. since 1900, were held at 3 P.M. yesterday in St. Thomas Church, Fifth Avenue and Fifty third Street, in the presence of many persons prominent in financial circles. Mr. Steele died Saturday at his country home in Westbury, L.I., in his eighty-third year. His city home was 11 East Sixty-second Street. He was senior warden at St. Thomas for many years, and one of its chief benefactors, building a permanent choir school for the church, which he endowed…Mr. Steele was a lover of music, particularly church music, and some years ago had studied organ music under the direction of Dr. T. Tertius Noble, the church organist. At his request, Dr. Noble played at the services, flying from Santa Monica, California, to play and direct the boy choir, returning last night by plane to California. Among the opening selections played by Dr. Noble while the congregation was arriving were two of Mr. Steele's favorite numbers by Bach, "Aria in D" and "O Sacred Head Surrounded." At the close of the service he played another favorite "Coronache," a Scottish Highland lament. For the processional, "The Strife Is O'er" was sung and "Hark, Hark My Soul" for the recessional. The anthem "Souls of the Righteous," composed by Dr. Noble with the words of a biblical text arranged by the organist's father-in-law, the late Bishop of Truro of England, also was sung. Mr. Steele having requested it in a note left to the organist.[84]

From their initial meeting in early 1913, TTN and Steele enjoyed a loyal and trusting relationship. The firm handshake Steele gave him in 1913 promising that, as long as he was chairman of the music committee, he would never be turned out of STC, was indicative of the mutual respect and strong tie they enjoyed for those formidable years they had shared.[85] A letter of condolence and gratitude sent to TTN expressed the relationship the two men enjoyed: 'I feel almost as though condolences are due you [TTN] for you have lost such a wonderful friend.'[86] Steele's daughter, Kathryne von Stade wrote to TTN following the funeral:

> There is nothing I can say to tell you how deeply we appreciated your flying out for my Father's services, and how utterly beautiful the service was. So, just what he would have loved, that it was most inspiring and comforting to all of us. I really wish I could tell you how much it meant to us to have you there, but I just can't seem to put it to paper, as words don't seem to come that adequately, except how happy it made us all.[87]

The service was attended by over 1000 mourners, and was filled with music that Steele had chosen before his death. Brooks was not allowed to officiate; rather he assisted EMS, who was recalled specifically by the Steele family.[88] Brooks sent a letter to the family on 10 August 1939, stating that the church would cover all the expenses associated with flying TTN back to New York for the service, and for the costs incurred by the presence of the choir.[89] This was meant 'as a slight token of appreciation of all that Mr. Steele meant to us…and to me [Brooks] personally.'[90] The gesture, however, begs the question: why would Brooks feel the need to extend such a superfluous offer to the Steele family? TTN and the choir owed their very existence to Steele, and to think they would have expected payment for their involvement in the funeral service, seemed, at best, gauche, and at worst, extraordinarily rude. Brooks's correspondence was in bad taste, and was intended to place his organist in an invidious position. But the family, as witnessed in its communications to TTN, was without suspicion.

The vestry of STC set forth an official statement regarding Steele during their meeting on 9 October 1939:

> Mr. Steele was elected a member of the Vestry on December 5, 1905, Junior Warden, November 30, 1915, and Senior Warden, December 4, 1917, which office he held up to the time of his death…He was the most generous benefactor in the history of the Parish. As a thank offering for the signing of the Armistice at the conclusion of the World War in 1918, he presented the beautiful choir stalls and carved oak screens which adorn the Church. As a patron of music, he gave in 1922 the buildings which house the Choir School, and endowed the school; he caused another building to be erected in 1938 and increased the endowment, and in his will he made a further addition to its endowment, making his gifts to this object over a million dollars.
> More than once did he refer to the school as the best investment he ever made. He called the choir boys his dividends.[91]

Within the context of the same meeting, the vestry voted to proceed with specific financial redistributions of the Steele choir school endowment. With the deaths of Dodson, Truesdale, and now Steele, TTN conceivably had no allies on the committee. It was resolved by the vestry:

> Inasmuch as it contains no limitations on the following proposal, a motion was carried to pay Dr. Noble's salary, beginning January 1, 1940, half from the General Fund of the Church, and half from the Charles Steele Foundation Income Account (The Choir School Fund).[92]

The action seemed unnecessary; financial times in 1939 were no worse than immediately following the stock market crash in 1929.[93] Moreover, by dividing TTN's salary between the church and school, it became unclear to whom he was directly responsible. With hindsight, however Brooks was baiting TTN for a fight and his course of action was steadily bringing into more vivid focus the earlier description of Brooks as 'a strategist and patient in taking long views to pursue his ends.' The rector had been waiting for his moment to exert his authority, and with Steele's passing, the opportunity to enact a new policy to clip the wings of his organist had come at last.

Returning to the news of Steele's death: TTN was not notified by Brooks, the Steele family, or even Brooks's private secretary of the tragic news. Instead, he was sent a curt telegram from the church sexton:

[92] Ibid.
[93] As stated by Brooks in PYBs 1929-1940.

Charles Steele died this afternoon. His family regret your being away as he left a note desiring you to play at his services. Funeral at the church Monday three pm.[94]

Why would a sexton inform a senior member of staff of the death of the wealthiest and most influential man in the parish? The assistant organist during TTN's final years, McConnell, recalled this time at STC and commented pointedly:

I yield to temptation to note that from my own observations the rector in the 1930's and 40's was not always understanding and sympathetic. Unfortunately, there was a sexton-funeral director (the job was double-barreled). His name was Francis Connell, he was also known as Frank Connell - too close to my own nomenclature to be ignored, though there were never any serious mix-ups because of that. The problem was that the sexton had a powerful "in" with the rector and used it to undercut the music program whenever it pleased him to do so. He would, for instance, order that heat in the church be turned off even before the close of Evensong (heat was purchased from the city and turned on or off with a valve). The building cooled quickly on a winter's day and people who came to the post-Evensong organ recital grew uncomfortable - moreover, the organ started to change pitch rather frightfully. The sexton also referred to such staple fare as the "Brahms Requiem" with sneering disrespect. I recall vividly his sneering mimicry of a phrase "for Christ's sake" from Dr. Noble's anthem "Grieve Not the Holy Spirit". These attitudes (many other instances could be cited) were definitely not a plus for the music program but seemed to titillate the rector. [95]

Owing, perhaps, to Connell's combined position of funeral director and sexton, it was natural for him to communicate such news; however, it seems more likely that the rector did not care to inform TTN himself, and knowing that he would be agitated by any communication from Connell, he tasked him with the deed.

5.6 The formation of a new Music Committee

By January of 1940, a new music committee was formed, consisting of John V.W. Reynders, E. Victor Loew, and Robert Goelet, 'place men' in all but name.[96] All of these men were known to TTN and had been long-time parishioners of STC; however, none of them was a great financial supporter of the STC choir school.[97] Reynders, at the insistence of the rector, reported at the January 1940 meeting of the vestry that:

[95] Frank A. McConnell, F. A. G. O. (1913-2005), Memories of T. Tertius Noble (MS US-STC). McConnell, like Tietjen and Oberle, before him, never attended college. Instead, they sat for the AGO exams, at TTN's guidance, and launched their careers with only this certification.
[96] Reynders (1866-1944) served on the Vestry from 1927-1944; E. Victor Loew (b. 1874 in New York) served on the Vestry from 1936-1950; Robert Goelet served on the Vestry from 1937-1959. See also Wright, p. 300.
[97] There is no record of these surnames in choir school documents in either the church or school records.

The Rector has expressed a desire that the Music Committee give consideration to a number of matters pertaining to the Choir School, the use of the organ for teaching purposes, and the establishment of rules concerning these and other subjects connected with the music of our Church.

1. The equipment and enrollment of the Choir School on its enlarged basis makes desirable a more definite understanding of the responsibilities. Nominally the school has been under the charge of the Organist, Dr. Noble, whose time at the school, however, is very limited, owing to his other outside activities. It is suggested that the responsibilities for the conduct of the school can more properly be placed under the charge of the Headmaster, with the exception of the musical part of the curriculum, which would be in charge of the Organist.
2. The selection of pupils for the Choir School hitherto has been very largely in the charge of Dr. Noble. It is felt that the choice of boys should involve a somewhat broader scope of investigation, including, in addition to musical capabilities of the applicants, a careful consideration of the character and family backgrounds. The suggestion here is the Organist take responsibility for musical capabilities, the Headmaster for scholastic standing, with an over-all approval on the part of the Rector.
3. From time to time the Choir is invited to take part in musical events not connected with the Church. Just now arrangements seem to have been made for the Choir to sing at a number of business places and clubs. We feel that no commitments should be made without the previous approval of the Rector.
4. The excessive use of the great organ for instruction of pupils has given much concern to the Vestry, and proper restrictions for such use should be considered by the Committee. The organ is now twenty-five years old, and unless great care is exercised, the Vestry may be confronted by serious expenditures for repairs.[98]

The chair of the music committee subsequently communicated by letter to TTN:

I am enclosing for your files a copy of the Music Committee report adopted by the Vestry on 11th January, 1940. Part of the report, comprising the first four paragraphs, is also being sent to Mr. Benham for his information.

The last item [no. 4] you will note is left open and we must try to work this out in some fashion that will meet the views of the Vestry and not interfere too much with the important work of teaching. The problem of avoiding disturbance during the Lenten season will, I am sure, have your careful consideration.[99]

TTN did not respond to the letter from the vestry and on 7 February, six days after the letter was sent, Reynders wrote again:

The Vestry has its regular meeting on Thursday afternoon and in case you have any thoughts on the subject of our correspondence I want you to feel free to make any suggestions by telephone in the morning. I do not know anything that is apt to come up relating to musical subjects, however, I want you to know that I am quite anxious to find a solution to any problems that may arise at any time in a manner that will be mutually agreeable.[100]

The tone of this letter unmasked the almost Machiavellian methods which were taking place behind the scenes.[101] The rector, McConnell likely surmised, had put Reynders up to the task of confronting TTN on his position at the church. With [101] Reynders, being chair of the committee should have compiled an agenda regarding music for the meeting. It seems unusual for the chair of the committee to speak on behalf of the organist and choirmaster without being in regular dialogue with him concerning music.

Steele gone, Brooks felt he could more aptly address (and thus desirably reduce) TTN's power and influence. It is probable that Brooks might have made earlier attempts to undermine his organist, but there had always been the protecting veil of Steele's imprimatur (and his monetary influence undoubtedly 'talked') to shield TTN from any attack. Reynders's agenda in the matter, however, was clearly not his own,[102] but, even though he seemed an unlikely candidate for the music committee, his influence as a major business tycoon was probably seen by Brooks as a useful instrument.[103] TTN remained silent and did not respond by telephone to the second letter, but instead wrote in a measured manner to Reynders the following day:

> Thank you for your letter with the report of the Music Committee adopted by the Vestry on January eleventh, nineteen hundred and forty.
> The latter part of paragraph six is more than a puzzle, but perhaps you can explain it. On looking into the number of lessons I give each week, I find that the average is about seven and a half hours a week, not ten. Most organists are allowed two hours a day for their own practice. I assure you it is good for the instrument to be used; to keep it shut up through the week would do much harm. The time cannot be far off when I shall have to give up my work, and you will then probably appoint a young man who will certainly wish to keep up with the times by practising daily. I have been teaching ever since eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, at Ely Cathedral, York Minister, and St. Thomas Church. Until your letter came, it has never been suggested that I should give up this privilege. Mr. Steele was always most anxious that I should make use of the organ for teaching, in order to increase what he thought to be an inadequate income for a man at the very top of his profession. One day soon, perhaps, we can get together so that matters may be discussed.[104]

Meanwhile, the vestry met again and voted to take the cost of half of the assistant organist's salary from the Charles Steele Choir School fund; as it had previously done with TTN's salary.[105]

Since Reynders had not received the direct answers he requested from TTN by the appointed time, he reported as a matter of courtesy, 'that the various subject matters were discussed with Dr. Noble, whose hearty co-operation is appreciated [expected] by the Committee.' [106]

TTN's gentlemanly aversion to hasty communications served as a road-block. He found it improper to engage with the committee on such a level, without proper face-to-face communication with his employer, as had been the custom with EMS.[107] To TTN's disadvantage, the only productive results were enjoyed by the rector, manipulating the vestry to prod TTN unrelentingly on very direct and personal points - on which the rector knew TTN would be reluctant to voice his opposition. Brooks requested that the vestry document all of the concerns in the minutes, including further discussions on two additional matters:[108]

[Special Services] 5. The charges in force for music at special functions in the church are, generally speaking, in line with those of metropolitan churches. It is suggested that some differential be maintained in respect of regular parishioners and that all bills be sent out by the Sexton for accounts of the choir or organists, and that such bills where rendered to the families direct shall, in the case of funerals, be mailed not earlier than one week after the service.

[Condition and use of the organ] 6. As to the question raised by the Vestry concerning the great organ, Dr. Noble calls attention to the fact that the instrument is now twenty-five years old and that a substantial overhauling must be anticipated within the next few years at a cost of perhaps $15,000. The use of the organ by students occurs only in the presence of Dr. Noble himself. The number of weekly half-hour lessons is about twenty, involving the use of the organ for weekly periods after hours. While fully appreciating the value of such lessons, it is, nevertheless, to be noted that the use of the organ for teaching exceeds its use for services, perhaps in the ratio of ten hours to four hours. The hourly cost of the organ based on fifteen hours of use per week during eight or nine months of the year, including repairs, amortization, interest and power is approximately $8.00 per hour, or $4.00 per lesson, for which only the very low charge of $5.00 is made by Dr. Noble.[109]

It was not accidental that the vestry chose to concern itself with the collection of fees by the music department. Furthermore, that the sexton would be designated to collect the fees, confirmed interference behind closed doors. Also, why would the use of the organ be of such concern to the vestry, to explore its use to the point of minutia? TTN had been teaching, with the support of the vestry, since the new organ was installed in 1913. He later reflected on his philosophy:

[106] Ibid.
[107] See ch. 4, p. 88. TTN often met with EMS and Steele over lunch or in Steele's office on Wall Street.
[108] VM 1940, p. 74: '…much of what follows has already been the custom, but is stated here as a matter of record.'
[109] Ibid., p. 75-76.

> Outside my church activities, the large class of private pupils I had been able to build up was a constant joy. I have always loved teaching, and the many human contacts it has brought, but at York my other duties were so numerous that I was never able to take as many pupils as I should have liked. I have always felt that the two necessary qualities in a student are first, a love of music, and, secondly, a willingness to work. Great talent is stimulating and challenging when one finds it, but it is rare. The musical world needs to be populated with those who are able to take a constructive working part in the community in some particular phase of musical activity, a compelling social force for good. Though a few talented men and women have passed through my hands during my life, and have achieved professional distinction, the majority have found their level in useful positions, and are instilling a love of music in their respective communities. This 'majority' is very important. It constitutes the backbone of the profession. Virtuosity in any field is admirable, but a sincere love of ones profession is socially progressive.[110]

Connell was at the root of these conundrums. The regulation surrounding the fees pointed to the earlier concern by TF of TTN keeping money to himself (in hindsight, an unwise course of action), and Connell most assuredly saw this as a way of annoying him.

The organ saga is more transparent and directly linkable to Connell who would have been the only person in the building after hours to be aware of the minute details of TTN's private teaching habits. The members of the vestry were businessman who did not have time to frequent the church or monitor the organist's pedagogical methods. To note the exact number of hours the organ was switched on or off, and the costs associated therewith would have been the knowledge of the person responsible for the utilities and workings of the church: the sexton. A larger plot was at work to restrict and frustrate TTN to the point of resignation, or due to his advanced age, retirement. In truth, Brooks had resented TTN's position from the very beginning of his rectorate, and with the aid of Connell to carry out his 'dirty work,' Brooks saw this as an easy way to force TTN from his post, without himself having the need to terminate TTN's employment.

The strain of this turmoil had an effect on TTN's enthusiasm for the year 1940; his parish yearbook article contained a mere four sentences.[111] Compounding the situation was the war in Europe which the United States entered in December of [111] 1940 PYB, p. 40: 'As usual, I [TTN] am grateful to all the members of the choir, for they show enthusiasm for all that is worthy in the way of singing and good church music.'

1941.[112] For TTN, his focus remained on the quality and beauty of worship at STC, and by his word, the standard of the singing did not decrease, but the turn-over on the back rows of the choir was significant.[113]

The rector would ultimately not have long to wait for TTN to desist. Brooks's modus operandi was unkind and out of keeping with his theology of 'putting Christ first'.[114] Baldly, he could not tolerate the music department's continual high quality and extreme success, nor could he bear the prevailing high status of TTN which he saw as a threat to his ego and position as rector. It was, regrettably, yet a further example of those perennial wrangles between clergy and organist which, given the ultimate power and authority of the former, concluded deleteriously for the latter.

Other foundation stones of the old regime were, piece by piece, dismantled. During Eastertide of 1941, the vestry resolved that the choir would no longer be allowed to broadcast Brahms's Ein Deutsches Requiem during the three hours on Good Friday. This was a longstanding tradition, heard through national radio broadcasts (although this ruling was not to take effect until the following year).[115] Additionally:

[112] PYB 1941, p. 9 (from the rector): 'The call for volunteers and the operation of the Selective Service Act took a considerable number of our young men into the armed forces of our country. The number is bound to increase as time goes on, and our parish will doubtless have as many enrolled as in the first World War.'

[113] PYB 1941, p. 39. 'Because of the draft and other reasons, our bass department has greatly changed…Both boys and men are more than loyal and give of their best at all times. I can safely state that the members of our choir constantly endeavour to maintain the highest possible standard of perfection, to fit the great beauty of the church in which it is their privilege to worship.'

[114] Wright, p. 156, Brooks remarked in his first sermon on 2 October 1926 on the examples of being Christ to one another: 'In His [Jesus] teaching He went to the heart of the matter with simplicity, using the simplest possible words, leaving little of no doubt in the minds of His hearers, and, using no arguments.'

[115] VM post-Easter 1941, p. 150. The choir signed a contract with NBC in 1935 (Ch. 5, p. 11) to continue the broadcasts in the NBC studios. TTN remarked, 'it became an annual event for our choir of sixty men and boys to broadcast the Deutsches Requiem on Good Friday over the National Broadcasting Company's network. On these occasions the St Thomas Church Choir was augmented by a chorus of thirty men and women, a choral society from New Jersey, under the baton of my baritone soloist, Rob Crawford, known as the 'Flying Baritone'. The orchestra was made up of players from the NBC.' (TTN Memoirs, Ch. 7, p. 13).

the main doors [on Fifth Avenue] of the church would be kept closed from the time the eleven o'clock service begins on Easter until the entire service has been completed; and that no others be admitted during this time; and that the custom of holding an organ recital at five o'clock Easter afternoon be discontinued.[116]

The end to TTN's polite correspondence came as a result of the aforementioned vestry meeting, the results of which were not communicated to TTN until a year later, before Easter 1942.[117] On 12 March 1942, about twenty days before Good Friday, TTN sent a handwritten letter to Reynders:

As chairman of the Music Committee I regret that you did not inform me of the decision of the Vestry held nearly a year ago. I have learned today that no recital is to be given Easter Day, this is unfortunate, but as the decision has been made I must abide by it. Many music lovers will be more than disappointed. I also note that my choir must not broadcast on Good Friday. For the future I shall esteem it a favour if you will inform me of any changes. I have worked loyally for this Parish for 29 years, and I feel that I deserve a little more consideration.[118]

Reynders responded on 16 March:

I found your letter of 12 March upon my return to New York, having been absent from the city off and on for several months. In fact, I missed the last two meetings of the Vestry, so that I am not thoroughly familiar in regard to what might have transpired.

I believe that a year ago there was some unfavorable comment due to the fact that the choir was broadcasting during the period of the three-hour service on Good Friday. This being the most solemn service of the year, it was not thought appropriate to have such conflict. I had assured naturally that you would have been advised before arranging any public appearance of the choir, the Rector would naturally be consulted, and I believe this general understanding was had several years ago.

In regard to the proposed omission of the organ recital after the evening service on Easter Day, I made some inquiries yesterday and the only suggestion was that due to the constant procession of visitors going through the church, the organ recital would be very much interfered with and it seems impossible to have the visitors sit quietly in the pews. It seems to me that this is a subject which might very properly be discussed with the Rector.

You may be assured that the Music Committee fully appreciates the loyalty of your service to the Church and no discourtesy was intended, and I am sure that with a little cooperation there will be no occasion for misunderstandings.[119]

Reynders had very likely consulted with Brooks before writing his letter, which highlighted the two items to which Brooks knew TTN would take the greatest offence: Good Friday and the organ recitals. [120]

[116] Ibid.
[117] The series of organ recitals, begun in 1915 and played every Sunday at 8pm during the choir season, had been cut back significantly in 1939 (December through Easter Day, at 5pm).
[118] Letter from TTN to Reynders, 12 March 1942 (MS US-BUAGO).
[119] Ibid., 16 March 1942.
[120] These two items had a long history associated with TTN and STC. Brooks knew this would be very personal for TTN.

Since the broadcasts on Good Friday were a long-standing commitment, TTN may not have felt the need to revisit the issue with Brooks, after his decree on outside engagements of the choir.[121] Brooks chose to say nothing about the broadcast the entire year leading up to Easter 1942, waiting instead for the opportune moment to have Reynders inform TTN of the vestry's decision. This ensured TTN would not have time to organize a counteraction. The proposed argument surrounding the cancellation of the Easter Day organ recital placed TTN in a position of no recourse. If he complained publicly on the issue, the vestry had the alibi of protecting TTN's sensibilities from the so-deemed extraneously noisy Easter Day church. Brooks had successfully boxed him into a corner.

Meanwhile the post-Easter to Christmas period of 1942 was focused on the war and the continued enhancement of the STC endowment fund. Gone were the days of poetic messages from the rector on the responsibilities of the STC community, especially to those at home during war.[122] By contrast, the 1942 PYB contained over two-and-one-half pages from the rector regarding gifts made to the endowment.

5.7 TTN's Resignation

In early 1943, after thirty years of service, TTN succumbed to the pressure of Brooks, at the hand of the vestry, and on 23 January, Reynders received TTN's resignation as Organist and Choirmaster of STC:

To the Members of the Music Committee:

Gentlemen

In April of this year, I shall have completed sixty-five years of active service as organist and master of the choir in various churches and cathedrals of England and America.

Thirty of these years have been devoted to work in St. Thomas Church. During these thirty years I have endeavored to maintain the highest possible standard both in choir and presentation of church music, worthy of the great building in which it has been my honor to work.

[121] See p. 158.

[122] PYB 1917, p. 9, EMS: 'We are in the war…the service flag reminds you that 178 of the men of the parish have entered the national service and wear their country's uniform.'

Through the generosity of my friend, the late Mr. Charles Steele, and the co-operation of my two rectors, I have had the very great privilege to work in one of the finest choir schools in the world, an institution of which every member of the congregation should be proud.

The time has now come when I wish to retire from active work in the Church, and take a well-earned rest. I wish this retirement to take effect in June.[123]

The letter was addressed to the music committee and specifically not to the vestry or the rector, who was his actual employer.[124] With dignity and respectable reasoning he presented his decision as a gentleman; there was no hint of any unpleasantness or animosity. The music committee responded to TTN on 29 January, accepting his resignation:

Dear Dr. Noble,

Your letter of January 23rd, indicating your purpose to retire as Organist of St. Thomas Church, as of June 30th, 1943, arrived during my temporary absence in Washington. I had assumed that a similar communication went forward to the Rector.

The subject was brought before a meeting of the Vestry yesterday and the prospect of losing your valued service was viewed with regret. The responsibilities involved in the management of the Choir and the conduct of the musical arrangements must at times prove onerous and your desire to devote your time more fully to composition is of course understandable.

It seemed to the Vestry desirable on many accounts to defer any public announcement and in consequence formal action was held in abeyance until a subsequent meeting of the Vestry.

Meanwhile I voice the feeling of the Rector, the Music Committee, and the Vestry in expressing our appreciation of the outstanding contribution you have made to the beauty of our services and to the standard of religious music generally throughout the church of which St. Thomas forms only a small part.[125]

Reynders's letter revealed that TTN had only sent his letter of resignation to the music committee and not the rector.[126] The subtle manner in which TTN had bypassed Brooks revealed his anger (and undoubted contempt) which the vestry must have noted. The mention of TTN retiring to focus on composition was not

[124] See worldwide website www.episcopalarchives.org/CandC_2009.pdf, accessed 21 September 2014, Canon II.5 states: 'It shall be the duty of every Member of the Clergy to see that music is used as an offering for the glory of God and as a help to the people in their worship in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer and as authorized by the rubrics or by the General Convention of this Church. To this end the Member of Clergy shall have final authority in the administration of matters pertaining to music. In fulfilling this responsibility the Member of the Clergy shall seek assistance from person skilled in music. Together they shall see that music is appropriate to the context in which it is used.'
[125] Letter from Reynders to TTN 29 January 1943 (MS US-BUAGO). 'It was thereupon moved and carried that the resignation of Dr. Noble be accepted June 30, 1943 with sincere regret, that the music committee be requested to arrange for some form of expression of Dr. Noble's long and faithful service and that steps should be taken by the Committee to secure a successor.
[126] Reynders said 'he had assumed' implying that his assumption took for granted what had, in actuality, not occurred.

stated in the resignation, but Brooks likely determined that Reynders should use that form of 'spin' to reassure the public in case any influence on the rector's part might be perceived. Furthermore, the statement that the 'management of the choir and conduct of the musical arrangements must at times prove onerous' was, given the nature of TTN's experience, mildly patronising.

It was not until 22 March that the committee and vestry communicated under official cover to TTN, confirming the acceptance of his resignation and details of his formal departure from STC:

> Confirming my several verbal messages and supplementing my previous communications to you of 29th January 1943, the subject of your desire to retire as Organist of St. Thomas was brought up for action at a meeting of the Vestry held on 25th February, at which time your resignation, effective as of 30th June 1943 was accepted with sincere regret.
>
> I know it is the desire of the Rector and Vestry to indicate in some appropriate manner the appreciation which is felt of the great value of your services covering so long a period of years. Accordingly, I shall hope to communicate with you again in the near future and in the meantime beg to remain
>
> Faithfully yours,
> J. V. M. Reynders[127]

Additionally, the vestry resolved that:

> Organist and Choirmaster Emeritus is hereby conferred on Dr. Noble in testimony whereof the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Thomas Church have hereunto subscribed their names and affixed the seal of the church, this twenty-fifth day of May in the year of our Lord, Nineteen Hundred and Forty-Three (Signed by the Rector, Wardens, Vestrymen and Clerk).
> Mr. Gaelet also reported that the Committee would soon meet candidates for the position of organist and choirmaster to succeed Dr. noble and would report its findings and recommendations to the Vestry.[128]

On 1 April, the organist's periodical, The Diapason, published the first public article regarding TTN's retirement. TTN, by this point, was considered one of the foremost musicians in America, and news of his retirement was cause for sadness and profuse recognition at the conclusion of such an illustrious career.[129]

---

[127] VM 1943, pp. 237-238. Mr. Reynerds went on to report that the committee consulted with the Rector and decided to award TTN a pension. The committee felt that the Vestry felt strongly to show their appreciation for TTN's work. They voted to award TTN 50 per cent of his $4500 salary, renewable year to year, with consideration by the vestry.

[128] VM 1943, p. 259.

[129] 'T. Tertius Noble, Mus D., F. R. C. O. one of the outstanding figures in the organ world in America ever since he came to New York from his native England, will retire as organist and choirmaster of St.

Letters arrived from all over the world congratulating and thanking him for his many years of service.[130] The loyal admirers from the many services, concerts, recordings, and broadcasts were extraordinary, and fortunately for him, even though his own rector could not appreciate his position, he was reassured that the larger world was, indeed, grateful.[131]

The vestry, music committee, and Brooks honoured TTN on 5 May with a dinner at the University Club in Manhattan.[132] TTN graciously thanked the parish in his yearbook article:

> Just thirty years ago I wrote my first report for the year book, soon after my appointment as organist and master of the choir in 1913. Now I am submitting my last report as my retirement will take place in June, 1943.

Brooks, in the same publication, made no remarks in his article about music or the retirement of TTN; somewhat predictably, he obsessed (at this stage ad nauseam) about the endowment fund, and the resignation of the assistant priest to take up a new post.[134]

The day of TTN's final service was Trinity Sunday, 20 June 1943, and included the Mass setting by Oldroyd (in the 1940 Hymnal), the anthem 'Come up hither, and I will show thee what shall be hereafter' of Spohr, and the 'St. Anne' Fugue (BWV 525) of Bach as the closing voluntary.[135] The previous week's service was filled with music chosen by the graduating class of the choir school, with the sermon given by the assistant rector.[136]

Perhaps ironically for Brooks, whose focus had been on the improvement of education at STC, Benham and the entire choir school staff resigned as a result of TTN's retirement.[137] It was a true mark of their loyalty to him. The rector's report, published in early 1944, reflecting on the year 1943 remarked primarily on the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of the choir school; taking on the form of a chronological narrative.[138] Furthermore he relayed the vestry's minutes of securing a suitable successor for TTN:

> The Vestry secured as Dr. Noble's successor, Dr. T. Frederick H. Candlyn, formerly organist of St. Paul's Church and head of the Music Department of the State College for Teachers, Albany, N. Y. Thus history again repeats itself since Dr. George William Warren, organist at St. Thomas for thirty years, also served at St. Paul's, Albany, N. Y.

[136] New York Herald Tribune, Monday 14 June 1943: 'At yesterday's service, a service of Holy Communion, Dr. Noble played three of his own compositions, chosen for the occasion by the twelve members of the graduating class of the choir school, which held commencement exercises on Saturday night. Two of these were "The Nine-fold Kyrie," which Dr. Noble played following the commandment reading; and the offertory anthem, "Grieve Not thy Holy Spirit." The third composition was "The Communion Service in A," which Dr. Noble, who is now seventy-five years old, wrote in England in 1888, when he was twenty-one. The composition won first prize in a competition open to all the composers in the British Isles. Dr. Noble said yesterday that on Wednesday he will leave New York for his home in Rockport, Mass., and will remain there until the end of November. He said he expected to devote much of his time to the composition and editing of church music. The sermon preached at yesterday's service was preached by the Rev. Sturgis K. Riddle, assistant rector, and was based on the story of the Pentecost- the story of the group of men who were "with one accord." As a tribute to Dr. Noble many churches in the city included his organ compositions in their musical programmes yesterday.

With the resignation of Dr. Noble, all the Masters at the School likewise resigned and their places immediately were filled, in spite of teacher shortage due to the War. With the appointment of the Rev. James O' Carson, Jr. as headmaster, we now have a real church school as well as a Choir School and there is no doubt but that it will maintain its high standard and scholarship.[139]

Brooks failed to mention one important coincidence regarding his relationship to the new organist and choirmaster. He served as rector of St Paul's, Albany, and during his tenure, in 1915, he hired Candlyn as organist and choirmaster of the church.[140] Brooks had an affinity for the British persona, to the point of adopting a false English accent as was popular with many Hollywood actors of the day.[141] Brooks could well have been jealous of TTN's natural accent and persona, but hiring a successor of the same background, makes that seem unlikely. In truth it is more probable that Brooks was guilty of a much more fundamental sin - that of jealousy - based on what he perceived as playing a deferential role to TTN's nationally famous position at STC.

Brooks's remark with regard to the choir school staff was similarly suspect. His only documented frustrations with the school were in connection with TTN and that Benham's authority was under the latter's rather than his own. Benham had been hired in 1928, two years after Brooks began as Rector, so EMS had no history in the matter. The pursuit of high academic standards would also have had no bearing on hiring a headmaster who was an ordained member of the clergy. The Rev. James O' Carson, Jr., about whom Brooks stated that under his leadership, '[we will] now have a real church school as well as a Choir School' possessed no experience in running an operation as complex as the STC choir school.[142] Ultimately, O'Carson's transformative time at the choir school lasted one year, 1943 to 1944.[143]

TTN's glamorous entry into America and STC had been filled with excitement and energy, resulting from such an unusual confluence of riches: moving from York to New York, a new church building, a new organ, and the great promise of a choir school. In the end, without engaging in a public battle (which he likely would have won), TTN gave in to Brooks's desire for his removal from the church and school; the days of Camelot were over, and all at the hand of one man's insecurities and personal resentment.

The experience of building his choir school with EMS, Steele, and Benham was a monumental one. TTN later reflected on his working relationship with Benham:

> Mr Benham undoubtedly raised the standard of scholarship, and in his quiet manner showed considerable executive ability in running the school, for he had a clear mind for detail. Under him were four other men responsible for the academic side of the school and the sports. As the years progressed under Mr Benham's leadership competition to get into the Choir School became keener and keener, for we were making a good reputation during this period.[144]

5.8 Final Years

In June of 1943, TTN and Meriel left STC and their choir school apartment, and permanently moved to their summer home on Old Garden Road in Rockport, Massachusetts. TTN had built this home in 1931 for the purpose of retirement.[145] His work in New York became less frequent as the title of Organist Emeritus allowed for very few privileges. Following a brief public recital in February of 1947, '[his] long and wonderful association at St. Thomas was complete.'[146] This was not his final

I first went to Rockport soon after I came to the United States and spent a number of summer holidays there. As the years progressed my family and I grew to love this old New England town, rich in history. Rockport reminded us so much of the south coast of Cornwall in England, the rockbound coast, the beauty of the tree-clad shore line, the snug harbour and the quaint winding streets with their white frame houses, were very appealing. Many of my compositions were sketched along this section of the shore line, by the ocean-surrounded Straitsmouth Rocks where I was inspired by the music of the waves.'

public appearance as an organist, but the press gave TTN an honourable mention for this important event of closure for him and the church.[147]

In Rockport, TTN continued to teach and compose, while serving as the organist of the town's small parish church, St Mary's. His expertise in organ building was put to good use in assisting with the purchase of a pipe organ, built by his friend, E. M. Skinner.[148] TTN recalled:

> Though my duties at St Thomas were finished, I had no intention of stopping work. The autumn following my retirement, I was invited to teach at the Sacred School of Music founded by the eminent church musician, Clarence Dickenson and associated with the Union Theological Seminary in New York City. I gladly accepted this opportunity to work with young students. There was happiness in the realization that I could still be useful in my profession. Also, I took private pupils in harmony, counterpoint and composition, some by correspondence.
> I was now able to devote a great deal of my time to composition and the arranging and editing of works for the organ. Life, as I feared it might be after my retirement, was far from dull. Indeed, I thoroughly enjoyed my new freedom which was full of activity.
>
> I was still in demand as a recitalist. It was always an honour to be invited to play at the National Cathedral, in Washington DC, where I generally gave a recital during the Easter season. The organ which had been built by Ernest M. Skinner was a splendid instrument, a challenge to the powers of any recitalist. In Washington, it was always my purpose to hear the choir at the Cathedral. The Organist and Choirmaster, Paul Callaway, one of my old pupils, whose talent and capacity for hard work had brought him to the forefront as a church musician, was in charge of the music. His services were a joy to attend, for his choir when at its best reached the highest standard of singing.
> Later on I spent part of a winter in Washington for the prime purpose of being able to attend the services in the cathedral.[149]

Due to his fame as a choir trainer, TTN was approached by his publisher, G. Schirmer of New York, with the idea of publishing a manual on his philosophy regarding the training of boy choristers. Released at the same time as his retirement in 1943, a twenty-four page pamphlet entitled, The Training of the Boy Chorister contains what TTN deemed as necessary for success at training young boys to sing in a liturgical setting. He addressed the general issues relating to vocal production, including how one should go about selecting appropriate voices for a choir. 'When boys present themselves for a voice test, it is very necessary to approach them in a happy manner, avoid any sort of stern attitude, and put the candidate at his ease: in other words, "kid him along" until he feels quite at home.'[150] TTN could, no doubt, be intimidating as a choirmaster, but his experience taught him that children had yet to develop the personal skills of an adult, and required the benefit of a fostering and encouraging environment, in order to coax the singer to produce his best work.

The only documented account of TTN's philosophy regarding vocal pedagogy is also contained within the pamphlet's pages. He addressed the basic issues of posture, breathing and vowel production. Specific attention was given to allowing a boy to sing as naturally as possible:

> Be careful not to alter the natural shape of the mouth in this [oo] sound, then gradually in the same breath merge into me, keeping the tone placed exactly as loo, but let the e vowel have its true character. Many choirmasters unfortunately teach their boys to hoot the vowel oo, telling them to shape their mouth as if they were about to whistle! This kind of voice training is beyond the understanding of sane people, and should never be tolerated. A forward tone is necessary on all vowels, and forward means out of the throat, into the resonance chamber, and not so far forward that all possibility of resonance is destroyed. If we are to get perfect pronunciation of our words, we must first of all learn how to produce all vowels in their true character. Some teachers tell us that the pure e vowel, as in me, cannot be sung with good tone, but that it must be sung as e in egg! What poisonous doctrine! Every word sung should be pronounced as in speech. No change in the character of the vowel should be tolerated in order to make it easier to sing.[151]

There is a certain freedom and abandon contained in TTN's language regarding the singing techniques of others. The candid privilege afforded one of a certain age and stage in life has been exercised throughout the pages of this booklet, which make the richness of content all the more valuable. TTN spoke of experience with what had worked and what had not worked in his career. His refined ways were the product of his years in Cambridge, Ely, York, and New York; more importantly, his ways were an organic result of adapting to his environment, which ultimately, was the reason for his success.

TTN's final public appearance as an organist was in the summer of 1947:

> On 22 and 29 July, at the request of the Dean, I presented the last two organ recitals of my career. Further work along these lines was prevented by the loss of my sight, for it was my fate during my last years to go blind. The first recital was broadcast by the BBC. On each occasion the great nave of the cathedral was packed. Many had come to see their old friend for the last time. They were thrilling evenings. To play the York Minster organ [was] an honour and a truly magnificent experience. It seemed fitting too, that I should end my professional career as a recitalist in the Cathedral and in the City where I had spent fifteen keenly interesting and some of the most productive years of my life.[152]

By the early 1950s, TTN was almost completely blind from a treatable ailment that was misdiagnosed some years earlier.[153] He spent his final years at home with MSN and PRN, although he remained in communication with his many former students and worldwide acquaintances. TTN continued to correspond by writing letters; his handwriting virtually illegible. MSN would often write messages on the bottom of letters, unbeknownst to TTN:

Dear Andrew, I think you can read this. I really don't see how he writes at all, as he can't see a thing! This letter isn't quite as good as usual but I hate to ask him to write it again.[154]

TTN died at home on 4 May 1953, one day shy of his 86 birthday.[155] The press spoke of his career, which spanned more than sixty years, and quoted him following his retirement at STC: 'I've had thirty years of the most intense happiness here and I've never regretted leaving England and York Minister for America and St Thomas'.[156] A small funeral service was held at 10.30 on the morning of 6 May at St Mary's Church in Rockport.[157] TTN was later remembered at STC with a service featuring his music, under the direction of his successor, Candlyn, as well as a sermon, delivered by Brooks.

…While we think of Dr. T. Tertius Noble as the eminent composer of good church music, we must not forget that he along with Ernest M. Skinner was largely responsible for the erection of the fine instrument which graces this church, and which has been added to and improved by our own Dr. Candlyn, an instrument which is generally conceded to be one of the finest in the country. At its keyboard a large number of men, and some women, received from Dr. Noble as a teacher, the art of playing well, and who today, as we revere his memory, rise up and call him blessed.[158]

Brooks must have forgotten that only ten years earlier, the very organ and students to whom he was referring, were at the centre of a heated exchange between TTN and the vestry regarding the use of the organ for private teaching (!).[159] The improvements to the organ by Candlyn were also not in keeping with TTN's wishes, who some years earlier, mentioned difficulties with the maintenance of the instrument. This request, incidentally, was ignored by Brooks.[160] Brooks continued:

> Not only did Dr. Noble teach the boys how to sing, but he also taught them good manners. Whether he was impressed by the motto of William of Wykeham that "manners mayketh man," and I think he was, one thing is certain that after one week in the choir school the boys never failed to say "Yes, Sir" instead of the usual "Yup," or words akin thereto…Doctor Noble has passed to his great reward and as his soul entered the Gates of Paradise, I like to think that he was welcomed by the "harpers playing upon their harps." He though dead will forever live as his music is played and sung throughout the Anglican Communion as well in other churches where is an appreciation of good music…May the soul of this great servant of God rest in peace and may light perpetual shine upon him.[161]

TTN often remarked that as long as he was able, he would fight for the great cause of offering the best music possible in the service of the church and to the glory of God. 'Let us strive to sing in a devotional manner, doing our utmost to interpret the sung words with due thought to their meaning. If we do this, we make our service an act of worship rather than a musical display.'[162] May it be said that this was achieved a thousand times over, and to that a 'well done, thou good and faithful servant' is due.[163]

CONCLUSION

As TTN prepared to take his leave, following thirty extraordinary years of service to STC, his mind was inevitably filled with many emotions. Having just lost the battle of his career to Roelif Brooks, a person who represented, for many, the face of God through his position as rector, was painful and unfortunate. TTN remarked on the period leading up to his retirement:

> All through that spring season, I was encouraged by the numerous letters I received from friends, acquaintances and total strangers, expressing in many ways what the music at St Thomas had meant to them. As each Sunday passed and the time for my last services in June approached the congregations grew larger at the afternoon services which were largely musical, until the entire body of the church was full. I was most grateful for this evidence of appreciation. Finally, the Sunday when my duty to play my last services came, that was a hard day. I shall always remember how beautifully the choir sang at the afternoon service. After the last chord of the concluding voluntary, I closed the organ console and quietly slipped from the church. My work of thirty years was finished.[1]

Brooks had won the fight but his successful attempt to remove TTN from his post had been unnecessarily underhanded; in light of the supporting evidence found in Chapter Five, TTN's ousting proved to be motivated by jealously. TTN's relationships with senior clergy, both in England and at STC, had been productive and respectful. This is not to say that there were not disagreements, but there was never the level of dishonest or destructive behaviour that Brooks exhibited at STC. TTN's long-time friend and former rector, EMS, was undoubtedly aware of what transpired between his successor and former organist; however, he was powerless to prevent the damage that occured. EMS's words to TTN, following the announcement of his retirement, were filled with kindness and fond reflection upon the happy and fruitful years they had enjoyed together:

> My dear Dr. Noble, The tribute to you at the end of thirty years of service in St Thomas, as reported in the Herald Tribune impressed me as being conventional and painfully inadequate. Doubtless it was the fault of a 'cub' reporter.
> My memories of you from the time of our first meeting to this day are the brightest and happiest. It is true that Will MacFarlane first suggested that we invite you, but we made careful investigation and became soon convinced that in England you were facile princeps in your great profession that we feared we could not persuade you to come.

[1] TTN Memoirs, ch. 7, p. 30-31.

In America you were soon recognised as the Dean of ecclesiastical musicians and composers. This made me very proud. Indeed, during our twelve years of happy association, a great privilege for me, you were an infinite comfort to me in every part of my ministry. Your quick, sympathetic understanding, your reverent and radiant, strong and masterly spirit made your organ a truly celestial choir. We shall not hear the like again from any other person.

This is a poor way of thanking you - I should be trying to say things that clever critics say, but I must be personal, as your music always seemed to be - with its comfort, courage, and uplift for every human heart.

Now you will have more time for composing and we shall have new inspirations from your loving heart and worshipful spirit.

Sarah and I - and our boys - have more to thank you for than we can put on paper. Some time you must all come to see us and let us try to tell you.

May God's increasing blessing be with you and your dear ones, and may the years of your retirement be perfectly happy, and fruitful.

Our love to you all.

Affectionately,

Ernest Milmore Stires[2]

EMS was able to recognize, or moreover, openly to acknowledge, what TTN had meant to him personally, and what his valuable work had represented for the people of STC. Although Brooks subsequently hired Frederick Candlyn, his former organist from St Paul's Albany, to carry STC and its choir school forward, this move ultimately backfired:

…Dr. Candlyn and the rector, Roelif H. Brooks, had worked successfully together in Albany years earlier, things went awry at Saint Thomas. As relations deteriorated it became increasingly difficult for Dr. Candlyn to maintain the high standard of excellence of which he was capable, and to which the parish had grown accustomed. Dr. Candlyn's final years at Saint Thomas were unhappy ones, and he retired in 1954 almost simultaneously with the rector.[3]

The model of strained working conditions between priest and musician was a leit motif throughout Brooks's tenure at STC. Perhaps Brooks was unhappy working within the English cathedral model of worship and music that Noble and Stires had created; he may have preferred the American approach with a large mixed-voice choir, and robust congregational singing. This, though, was not STC. The church and its leaders had made a conscious decision in 1913 (by the hiring of TTN), that they wished to have music on a grander and more elevated scale – music that was worthy of their building and place in society.[4] As rector of STC, then, Brooks, was something of a square peg in a round hole; instead of making honest gestures toward voicing his discomfort with the style of music and choral worship he had inherited, he chose to react in a passive-aggressive manner dismantling the infrastructure that produced the musical results. Both TTN and Candlyn were victims of Brooks's approach. Following Candlyn's retirement, the vestry 'was [inevitably] aware, for various reasons, [that] the quality of their music had declined since the days of Dr. Noble. Accordingly they were anxious to engage someone who could work to return the choir to its former glory.'[5]

In 1954, a year following TTN's death, William Self (1906-1998) began as organist and choirmaster of STC. The changeable circumstances at STC ensured Self, like Candlyn, enjoyed an uneven tenure during Brooks's incumbency. Despite having been in post for seventeen years, Self was not able to enjoy an easier professional relationship with Brooks's successor, Frederick Morris. It was not until 1971, then, when Gerre Hancock was appointed as organist and master of choristers, and The Rev. John Andrew was elected rector that STC returned to its earlier tradition. A former chaplain to Michael Ramsay when he was archbishop of York, and rector of Preston Parish Church, Andrew raised the standard of music and liturgy and ensured it returned to the level of excellence set forth during TTN's tenure:

> Dr. Hancock, who came to Saint Thomas from Christ Church, Cincinnati, brought to Fifth Avenue a brilliance at the organ keyboard and a genius on the choir podium. His knowledge of music covered a broad spectrum, but his special affinity for and understanding of the English church music repertoire began to transform, from the start of his tenure, both organ and choir music in the great space of Saint Thomas…They [Hancock and his wife] brought to the church the broadest range of music that it had [4] 'Many of the members of the congregation preferred not to participate in the music, but felt that the choir was provided for the purpose of rendering music more worthy of the high praise of God, and that it was their privilege to enjoy the result undefiled by their less musically inclined neighbors in the pew. (Adelmann, p. 38).

ever known, and as a result the music program grew and flourished as it had during the era of Dr. T. Tertius Noble.[6]

In an distinctive way, TTN had created a music programme and choir school so inextricably linked to the English tradition, that operating the institution in any other fashion resulted in an incompatible outcome, hence Hancock's marked success.

EMS, Steele and the music committee had clearly envisaged the assimilation and implementation of the English cathedral choral tradition and its training methods into the tradition at STC. By selecting TTN, they ensured that the church and its music would be transformed. TTN was one of the finest exectuants of the English cathedral tradition, as was evidenced from his formal training and successes at Ely and York. STC had made an investment that paid dividends with interest.

The constant thread throughout this thesis has been the development and evolution of TTN's personal and professional relationships. He was fortunate to have had strong mentors during his formative years, particularly Charles Everitt and Charles Villiers Stanford. Everitt fundamentally saved TTN from a life of poverty; by his teaching and example, TTN learned how to elevate his own status in life, through hard work and discipline. Stanford, likewise, equipped TTN with a sense of musical and liturgical standards, couched in the paradigm of taste and good reasoning. The skills taught by these two men, combined with his own unique manner, set TTN on a path that was destined to change the world of cathedral music, both at home and abroad. TTN remarked on his final journey to England:

I remember so well rolling into London in my Buick car which I had brought over from the States. One heard the drone of traffic, the music of a vast city pulsating with the heart blood of a nation, the core of its life and activity. I could not help recalling my student days when I used to walk from Victoria Station to the Royal College of Music, a distance of five miles, in order to save a penny bus ride. In those days life with all its challenge lay ahead. Now, I was an elderly man looking back upon a musical career which had embraced both the Old and the New World, and for both I had a deep affection. As we jogged in and out of the stream of cars, I was well aware of the passing of time. The London I had known had grown through the years and had been changed by the progressive crudeness of modern warfare, with large gashes in her unending maze of streets, but London was essentially the same, still fighting with glowing courage for the traditions for which she had fought through the ages. The personality of this ever growing city meant much for one aspect of her culture, The Royal College of Music had given me the backbone of my musical education.

In the end, as Cosmo Lang had said forty years earlier, TTN did, in fact, bring something of the old world to the new. He brought an ancient tradition to a church, that, under the leadership of a forward-thinking rector, was yearning for something different; something that would transform the church's musical provision while also raising musical tastes and expectations to unprecedented levels. Today, STC and the choir school are still thriving, 101 years after TTN's arrival in America and remain in the vanguard of American church music. Those associated with its foundation succeeded in planting deep roots, just as the English cathedrals had done nearly a millennium earlier, and with TTN as its vital sentinel and pioneer, it has always been perceived as the shaping force in terms of choral standards and training in the cosmopolitan crucible of North America's choral culture.
